

Saudi Arabia: Background and U.S. Relations

Christopher M. Blanchard
Analyst in Middle Eastern Affairs

June 14, 2010

Congressional Research Service

7-5700

www.crs.gov

RL33533

Summary

The kingdom of Saudi Arabia, ruled by the Al Saud family since its founding in 1932, wields significant political and economic influence as the birthplace of the Islamic faith and by virtue of its large energy reserves. Since 2005, King Abdullah bin Abd al Aziz Al Saud has sought to strengthen Saudi relations with European and Asian counterparts and has worked to build and lead an Arab consensus on regional security issues such as Lebanon and the Israeli-Palestinian conflict. Domestic reforms under King Abdullah have codified royal succession rules, begun restructuring the justice system, and updated some educational curricula and practices. An Al Qaeda-inspired terrorist campaign inside the kingdom appears to have ebbed as security improvements and anti-extremism campaigns have been implemented. However, Saudi authorities remain focused on the threat of a resurgence in domestic terrorism. In March 2010, officials announced the arrest of over 110 individuals suspected of continuing involvement in Al Qaeda activities. Robust energy export revenues in recent years strengthened the kingdom's regional and global economic position and are now providing Saudi leaders with resources to meet investment needs and fiscal challenges posed by the global economic downturn.

A close Cold War-era relationship between the United States government and the ruling Al Saud family was built on shared interests in securing Saudi oil production and in combating global Communism. Since the end of the Cold War, the emergence of the Al Qaeda terrorist threat and volatile regional security conditions in the Middle East have tested U.S.-Saudi relations. The direct participation of 15 Saudi nationals in the terrorist attacks of September 11, 2001, and the identification of several Saudi nationals and entities as alleged supporters of terrorism have called into question Saudi Arabia's reliability as an ally for some U.S. observers. Increased official counterterrorism cooperation and shared concerns about Iranian foreign policy have provided a new strategic logic for U.S.-Saudi security relations since 2003. Long-standing defense ties remain intact, and U.S. arms sales have continued, with over $18.7 billion in potential Foreign Military Sales to Saudi Arabia approved by the executive branch and Congress since 2005.

While security cooperation has improved since 2003, the United States and Saudi Arabia continue to face a core challenge identified by the 9/11 Commission in its final report: defining a broader bilateral relationship that "leaders on both sides are prepared to publicly defend." The Obama Administration has continued to hold high-level consultations with key decision makers in the Saudi royal family on issues of mutual concern, including energy policy, finance, Israeli-Arab peace, Iran, trade, and counterterrorism. In conjunction with a May 2008 visit by President Bush to Saudi Arabia, the previous Administration announced new agreements relating to nuclear cooperation, infrastructure security training, and visas.

The Obama Administration has signaled its intention to engage the Saudi government as a strategic partner in efforts to promote regional stability and to defeat Al Qaeda. The 111th Congress has considered foreign assistance requests for Saudi Arabia and prohibited the use of FY2010 funds for assistance to Saudi Arabia, subject to a national interest waiver authority granted to the Secretary of State. The Obama Administration is requesting $360,000 in border security assistance and $10,000 in International Military Education and Training (IMET) funding for Saudi Arabia in FY2011. This report provides background information about Saudi Arabia and analyzes current issues in U.S.-Saudi relations.

Contents

Recent Developments.....	1
Background	4
Saudi Arabia’s Political Development.....	4
Saudi-U.S. Relations, 1931-1991.....	5
Saudi-U.S. Relations, 1991-2001.....	7
September 11, 2001, and its Aftermath	8
The 9/11 Commission Report	9
Saudi Responses	9
Recent Assessments	10
Terrorist Financing Concerns	10
Toward a New Relationship?.....	11
Recent Bilateral Agreements	13
Recent Congressional Interest in Saudi Arabia.....	14
U.S. Foreign Assistance to Saudi Arabia and Congressional Prohibitions.....	15
International Military Education and Training (IMET).....	15
Counterterrorism Assistance.....	16
Prohibitions on Foreign Assistance.....	17
FY2010 Appropriations Debate.....	18
U.S. Arms Sales to Saudi Arabia	19
Background	19
Criticism and Action in the 110 th Congress	20
BAE Corruption Inquiry.....	22
Current Issues in U.S.-Saudi Relations	23
U.S.-Saudi Military Cooperation	24
U.S. Military Training Mission in Saudi Arabia (USMTM)	25
Saudi Arabian National Guard Modernization Program (PM-SANG).....	25
Office of Program Management Ministry of Interior – Facilities Security Forces (OPM MOI-FSF)	26
Counterterrorism.....	26
Al Qaeda in the Arabian Peninsula	27
Combating Extremism	28
The Arab-Israeli Conflict.....	30
Saudi-Palestinian Relations	31
Saudi Peace Proposals.....	31
Iraq.....	33
Saudi Policy Priorities in Iraq.....	34
Saudi-Iraqi Diplomatic and Economic Relations.....	34
Economic Relations and Trade	36
U.S.-Saudi Trade.....	36
U.S. Oil Imports and Saudi Policy.....	36
U.S.-Saudi Foreign Direct Investment	37
Saudi Boycott of Israel and WTO Membership	38
Human Rights, Religious Freedom, and Political Reform	39
Political Reform Debates and Elections	40
Leadership and Succession.....	41
Social Reform Debates and Recent Leadership Changes.....	42

Human Rights	43
Religious Freedom	44
Consular Issues	45
Further Reading and Historical Resources	48

Figures

Figure 1. Map of Saudi Arabia	5
Figure 2. Non-Immigrant U.S. Visas Issued to Saudi Nationals, 1996-2009	46

Tables

Table 1. U.S. Military Training Provided to Saudi Personnel	16
Table 2. U.S. Assistance to Saudi Arabia, FY2004-FY2011	17
Table 3. U.S. Oil Consumption and Imports	37

Appendixes

Appendix A. Recent Proposed Arms Sales.....	49
Appendix B. Text of Saudi Peace Initiatives	52

Contacts

Author Contact Information	54
----------------------------------	----

Recent Developments

In December 2009, the House and Senate approved the FY2010 Consolidated Appropriations Act (H.R. 3288, P.L. 111-117). Section 7041 of the act prohibits the obligation or expenditure of funds appropriated by the act for Saudi Arabia, subject to a national interest waiver authority granted to the Secretary of State. The Obama Administration estimates that it will obligate $8,000 for International Military Education and Training (IMET) funds and $200,000 in border security assistance (Nonproliferation, Anti-terrorism, Demining, and Related Programs - NADR) funding for Saudi Arabia in FY2010. As of May 25, 2010, the Secretary of State had not issued a waiver for FY2010 funds. The Administration is requesting $10,000 in IMET funds and $360,000 in NADR funds to continue current programs in FY2011. IMET assistance makes Saudi Arabia eligible to purchase other U.S. military training at reduced rates using its own funds. The conference report for H.R. 3288 (H.Rept. 111-366) requires the Administration to report to Congress within 180 days (by June 14, 2010) on the net savings this eligibility provides to Saudi Arabia and other IMET recipients.

Saudi Arabia has hosted a number of Iraqi political leaders in the wake of Iraq's March 2010 national elections. President Jalal Talibani, Vice President Tariq al Hashimi, Kurdistan Regional Government President Massoud Barzani, Iraqiya list leader Iyad Allawi, Iraq Supreme Islamic Council leader Ammar al Hakim, and Al Sadr trend political council chairman Karrar al Khafaji all have visited Riyadh for consultations with Saudi officials. Saudi Arabia has yet to name an ambassador to Baghdad, and debt relief discussions remain unresolved. In light of longstanding Saudi concerns about instability and Iranian influence in Iraq, most observers expect that the outcome of coalition and cabinet formation negotiations in Baghdad will shape directly Saudi decisions about the future of the bilateral relationship. In response to accusations of Saudi financial and political support for the Iraqiya list in the recent election, Foreign Minister Prince Saud al Faisal bin Abdelaziz Al Saud said, "We support all Iraqis, and Iraq's unity, independence and sovereignty over its territory, and we maintain the same distance from all politicians." Most observers believe that Saudi Arabia would prefer to see a non-sectarian government emerge in Iraq that would help to balance Iran's influence in the region and that would not threaten its Arab neighbors.

Saudi Arabia's brief war with Yemen's Al Houthi rebel movement drew to a close in February 2010, ending months of air strikes and ground combat operations on the border between the southern Saudi province of Jizan and the northern Yemeni province of Sa'da. The Yemeni military had been battling the rebels for months in the latest and most intense round of fighting in a civil war that has resurfaced over years in spite of periodic cease-fire agreements. Over 130 Saudi military personnel were killed and hundreds more were injured in the fighting, which began in November 2009. The conflict was a major test of Saudi air and ground combat capabilities, which have been developed in recent years with the support of U.S. training and equipment purchased by the Saudi government through the U.S. Foreign Military Sales program. Saudi forces reportedly captured hundreds of alleged Al Houthi fighters during operations to prevent infiltration attacks and enforce a security zone along the border.

The fighting was the latest example of a trend that has seen Saudi Arabia drawn more closely into the affairs of its problematic southern neighbor, as Yemen's government upholds an uncertain ceasefire with the rebels amid continuing attacks from Al Qaeda in the Arabian Peninsula and ongoing demonstrations by separatists in southern Yemen. The threat that Al Qaeda in Yemen poses to Saudi Arabia was vividly illustrated by a failed assassination attempt in August 2009 against Assistant Interior Minister Prince Mohammed bin Nayef bin Abdelaziz Al Saud, the director of the kingdom's counterterrorism campaign. The March 2010 arrest of over 110 alleged Al Qaeda operatives in the kingdom, including twelve individuals described as squads of suicide bombers, reportedly prevented attacks on energy infrastructure in the kingdom. The death of young Saudi AQAP leader Nayef al Qahtani was announced in Yemen in mid-May 2010; Saudi authorities welcomed the announcement and noted that Al Qahtani had served as an important link between AQAP operatives in Yemen and the group's supporters in the kingdom.

The attempted Christmas Day 2009 airliner bombing in the United States created new urgency for U.S. plans to provide increased security assistance to the Yemeni government. The kingdom hosted a donors conference for Yemen in February 2010 and announced $115 million in new loans for Yemen to support education, infrastructure and health care projects. In 2006, Saudi Arabia pledged $1 billion in loans and grants for Yemen; officials continue to negotiate agreements to disburse those funds.

Saudi Crown Prince and Minister of Defense and Aviation Sultan bin Abd al Aziz Al Saud returned to the kingdom on December 9, 2009, after a yearlong absence during which he was treated for an undisclosed chronic illness—widely believed to be cancer—and spent most of the year recuperating in Morocco. During the Crown Prince's absence, King Abdullah bin Abd al Aziz named long-serving Interior Minister Prince Nayef bin Abd al Aziz to serve as Second Deputy Prime Minister, a position seen as a potential stepping stone to the position of Crown Prince and heir to the Saudi throne. Some observers express concern about the potential policy implications of Prince Nayef's conservative political and religious views, while others emphasize the constraints imposed on Saudi leaders by the kingdom's consensus-driven leadership system and by global and domestic economic conditions.

In February 2010, Secretary of State Hillary Clinton visited Saudi Arabia for consultations with Saudi leaders. In remarks with the Secretary, Saudi Foreign Minister Saud al Faisal bin Abd al Aziz Al Saud noted that Saudi leaders "appreciate the prompt movement of the U.S. Administration to resuscitate the [Israeli-Palestinian] peace process and to treat the major issue of conflict within the framework of the two-state solution which aims at an autonomous and viable Palestinian state." He added that "The kingdom believes in the importance of launching the peace process comprehensively to treat all the main issues of the conflict simultaneously, according to specific terms of reference and a clear-cut time schedule taking into account that the step-by-step policy and the confidence-building strategy have failed to accomplish their objectives." Saudi officials continue to vocally and vehemently criticize Israeli settlement activity, particularly in the environs of Jerusalem. At the March 2010 Arab League in Sirte, Libya, the foreign minister called for a "clear Arab movement... to address the campaign of Judaization and desecration of the Arab and Islamic heritage in the city of Al Quds {Jerusalem}."

The kingdom launched the King Abdullah City for Nuclear and Renewable Energy in April 2010, to oversee the country's planned development of nuclear energy production and meet rising domestic consumption needs. Like other oil exporting states in the region, Saudi Arabia has signaled its intention to develop alternative energy generation methods to preserve its oil resources as an export revenue source. Saudi Arabia signed a Memorandum of Understanding on Civil Nuclear Energy Cooperation with the United States in 2008 in which it signaled its intent to forego domestic uranium enrichment or fuel reprocessing in favor of procuring nuclear fuel from market sources.

Also in April, Saudi Intelligence Director Prince Muqrin bin Abd al Aziz Al Saud attended the Nuclear Security Summit in Washington, DC, and pledged the kingdom's support for a zone free of weapons of mass destruction in the Middle East. In his remarks, Prince Muqrin argued that "Israel's possession of nuclear weapons constitutes a fundamental obstacle to the achievement of security and stability in the Middle Eastern region." With regard to Iran, he stated that Saudi Arabia "welcomes the international endeavors to find a peaceful solution to this crisis through dialogue in such a way as to guarantee the right of Iran and other states in the region to the peaceful use of nuclear energy in accordance with the procedural safeguards, and under the supervision, of the International Atomic Energy Agency." He warned of the dangers and ultimate futility of a nuclear arms race in the region and signaled support for recent changes in U.S. nuclear policy.

Massive flooding in the western city of Jeddah killed over 120 Saudis in November 2009 and damaged thousands of homes and vehicles. The government's response in recent months has raised some Saudi's hopes for increased government responsiveness and support for official accountability. Over 50 officials were detained in the wake of the flooding and investigations into alleged administrative corruption and its role in the disaster are ongoing. Prince Khaled al Faisal bin Abd al Aziz Al Saud, the governor of Mecca, has overseen the special investigative committee looking into the matter. In May 2010, King Abdullah issued a royal decree calling for the referral of suspects for prosecution and issuing orders to a number of ministries and regional bodies to address factors that led to the floods and to make infrastructure improvements to curb future flooding threats. The decree was welcomed and praised by many Saudi observers.

Saudi Shiites in the Eastern Province have protested the arrest of a number of activists and the closure of a number of mosques in recent months. Sectarian tensions have risen in the kingdom in the wake of clashes between Shiite worshipers and religious police and security forces in the city of Medina in February 2009. Both King Abdullah and Shiite leaders such as Shaykh Hassan al Saffar appear to remain committed to the dialogue process dialogue that has prevailed in recent years. However, there appears to be potential for further confrontation between activist elements of the Shiite community and conservative members of the Sunni security and religious establishment in the Eastern Province, particularly with regard to Shiite demands for permits for new mosques and attempts at more public expressions of their faith.

Saudi public debate has focused intensely on issues of women's rights, education, and religious extremism in recent months, fueled by events and statements by clerics, journalists, and activists. Outspoken criticism of the alleged extremism of some religious clerics, clerical condemnations of gender mixing and certain media practices, and debate among women about their role and rights in society appear frequently, if not daily, in Saudi media. Many outside observers have noted marked differences in the intensity and frequency of public debate on these issues and argue that the government no longer has the ability it once held to effectively stifle public discourse on sensitive social matters, even as its control over security and political activity has tightened in recent years. By all accounts, certain so-called "red lines" still exist, most notably with regard to the ruling family and calls for fundamental political change. The boundaries of debate on religious and social issues now appear more fluid, though government officials, including the king, have called for moderation in the tone of public remarks and writing by citizens.

The 2009 State Department report on human rights in Saudi Arabia (released March 2010) notes both severe problems and improvements in human rights conditions. Restrictions on civil liberties and religious freedom, allegations of torture, and political detention were reported along with the implementation of judicial reforms and improvements in women's education.

Background

Saudi Arabia's Political Development

As the birthplace of the Islamic religion in 622 A.D. and as the home of Islam's two holiest sites (the cities of Mecca and Medina), the Arabian Peninsula has long occupied a position of importance within the broader Middle East. However, with the establishment of Arab empires based in Damascus and Baghdad in the centuries following the Prophet Mohammed's death, the peninsula sank into disunity and its relative political influence gradually declined. In the 16th century, much of the Arabian Peninsula came under the nominal rule of the Ottoman Empire, although tribal leaders effectively controlled most of the region. In the mid-eighteenth century, an alliance developed between an influential eastern family, the Al Saud, and the leaders of a puritanical religious movement known by outsiders as Wahhabism, after its founder, Mohammed ibn Abd Al Wahhab. The Al Saud-Wahhabi alliance built two states in the Arabian peninsula during the next century that eventually collapsed under pressure from outside powers and inter- and intra-family rivalries.¹

During the first quarter of the 20th century, a chieftain of the Al Saud family, Abd al Aziz ibn Abd al Rahman Al Saud (commonly referred to as Ibn Saud) overcame numerous tribal rivals with the support of his Wahhabi allies and, at times, the British government. By 1932, King Abd al Aziz had unified most of the Arabian Peninsula by force under his rule, and declared the establishment of the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia. Five of his sons—Kings Saud, Faisal, Khaled, Fahd, and Abdullah—have succeeded him as rulers of the third Saudi state during seven decades characterized by a rapid socioeconomic transformation of the country. A series of agreements, statements by successive U.S. administrations, arms sales, training arrangements, and military deployments have demonstrated a strong U.S. security commitment to the Saudi monarchy since the 1940s.

Saudi Arabia in Brief

Population (2009): 28,686,633 (includes 5,576,076 non-nationals) Growth rate: 1.85%

Area: 1,960,582 sq.km. (756,985 sq.mi.); just over one fifth the size of the United States

Ethnic Groups: (native Saudis only) Arab 90%; Afro-Asian 10%

Religion: (native Saudis only) Sunni 85-95%, Shiite 5-15%

Literacy (2003): 78.8% (male 84.7%, female 70.8%)

GDP (purchasing power parity, 2009): $585.8 billion; growth rate: 0.2%

External Public Debt (2009 est.): $72.4 billion

Inflation (2009 est.): 5.0%

Unemployment (2009): 11.6% (Saudi males); some estimates range up to 25%

Sources: International Monetary Fund (IMF); U.S. Department of Commerce; U.S. Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) World Factbook; Economist Intelligence Unit; and Saudi Arabian Monetary Agency (SAMA).

¹ For more information about Mohammed ibn Abd al Wahhab, see CRS Report RS21695, The Islamic Traditions of Wahhabism and Salafiyya, by Christopher M. Blanchard. For an account of the earlier Al Saud states see Alexei Vassiliev, History of Saudi Arabia, New York University Press, 2000.

Figure 1. Map of Saudi Arabia

Source: Map Resources Adapted by CRS. (March 2008)

Saudi-U.S. Relations, 1931-1991

Saudi-U.S. diplomatic relations were established on the foundation of military, political, and commercial understandings developed during and immediately following the Second World War. The United States recognized King Abd Al Aziz as the ruler of Hejaz and Nejd (the western and central regions of the peninsula) in 1931. However, prior to 1942, the United States did not have resident diplomatic representatives in the kingdom. From the early 1930s through 1945, U.S.-Saudi relations were shaped significantly by the awarding in 1933 of an oil exploration concession to the California Arabian Standard Oil Company [CASOC, the forerunner of the Arabian American Oil Company (Aramco), itself the forerunner of today's Saudi Aramco].

CASOC's discovery in 1938 of substantial oil reserves in eastern Saudi Arabia and subsequent private and public U.S. efforts to manage and defend oil production operations during the war years led to a deepening of bilateral relations. The United States gradually replaced the United Kingdom as the chief external political and economic supporter of the Saudi government during this period.²

Many observers of U.S.-Saudi relations identify a February 14, 1945, meeting between President Franklin Delano Roosevelt and King Abd al Aziz aboard the U.S.S. Quincy as the starting point for the more robust U.S.-Saudi political relationship that developed thereafter.³ The construction of a U.S. military airfield at Dhahran and the provision of U.S. military planning and training assistance from the mid-1940s onward formed the basis for bilateral military cooperation during the early postwar era. Aramco operations and oil exports, U.S. contributions to the establishment of the Saudi financial system,⁴ and the involvement of U.S. contractors in the development of the kingdom's infrastructure were the key pillars of bilateral economic and commercial relations during this period.

Saudi Arabia and the United States pursued some common national security objectives from the 1950s onward, in spite of recurring differences of opinion over regional issues, the most significant of which was the Arab-Israeli conflict. The Saudi and U.S. governments' divergent responses to Arab-Israeli conflicts in 1948, 1967, and 1973 created conditions that severely tested bilateral relations. Nevertheless, the Truman, Eisenhower, Kennedy, Johnson, and Nixon Administrations each viewed the Saudi monarchy as an ally in relation to other nationalist and socialist governments in the region and as a bulwark against the spread of Communism in the Gulf region and beyond.

The October 1973 Arab-Israeli war brought latent tensions in U.S.-Saudi relations to the surface and altered the prevailing political and economic dynamics of the relationship. Saudi leaders responded to U.S. support for Israel during the war by instituting an oil embargo and oil production cuts. In the United States, the oil shocks produced inflation, new concern about foreign investment from oil producing countries, and open speculation about the advisability and feasibility of militarily seizing oil fields in Saudi Arabia or other countries.⁵ In the wake of the embargo, both Saudi and U.S. officials worked to re-anchor the bilateral relationship on the basis of shared opposition to Communism, renewed military cooperation, and through economic ² See Aaron David Miller, Search for Security: Saudi Arabian oil and American foreign policy, 1939-1949, University of North Carolina Press, Chapel Hill, 1980; and, Simon Davis, "Keeping the Americans in line? Britain, the United States and Saudi Arabia, 1939-45: Inter-Allied Rivalry in the Middle East Revisited," Diplomacy & Statecraft, Volume 8: Number 1, 1997, pp. 96 -136.

³ See Memorandum of Conversation Between King of Saudi Arabia (Abdul Aziz Al Saud) and President Roosevelt, February 14, 1945, Aboard the U.S.S. "Quincy". Foreign Relations of the United States (FRUS), 1945, Volume VIII, pp. 2-3, 7-9. See also, "Texts of Letters Exchanged by Ibn Saud and Roosevelt," New York Times, October 19, 1945, pg. 4.

⁴ Arthur N. Young, Saudi Arabia: The Making of a Financial Giant. New York University Press, 1983; and, Oral History Interview with Arthur N. Young, Pasadena, California February 21, 1974 by James R. Fuchs, Harry S. Truman Library, available at <http://www.trumanlibrary.org/oralhist/young.htm>.

⁵ See, for example, Miles Ignotus, "Seizing Arab Oil," Harper's Magazine, March 1975; and, Congressional Research Service, "Oil Fields as Military Objectives: A Feasibility Study," Committee Print Prepared for the House Committee on International Relations Special Subcommittee on Investigations, August 21, 1975.

initiatives that promoted the recycling of Saudi petrodollars to the United States via Saudi investment in infrastructure, industrial expansion, and U.S. securities.⁶

During the Carter and Reagan Administrations, the Saudi Arabian government supported anti-Communist causes around the world in efforts that often ran parallel to or that were coordinated with U.S. policy.⁷ The 1979 Iranian revolution and the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan helped fuel a decade of collaborative U.S.-Saudi foreign policy efforts, including shared support for anti-Soviet mujahidin fighters in Afghanistan and for Saddam Hussein's war against Iran. The 1991 Persian Gulf War placed Saudi Arabia in the role of host for U.S. combat troops and military equipment involved in operations to evict Iraqi forces from Kuwait. The continued presence of U.S. troops in Saudi Arabia during the 1990s was cited as a serious provocation by some Saudi opposition figures and extremists, including Al Qaeda leader Osama Bin Laden, whose supporters, allies, and affiliates have since attacked the United States, Saudi Arabia, and others around the world.

Saudi-U.S. Relations, 1991-2001

The end of the Cold War eliminated the shared anti-Communist interests that had helped define U.S.-Saudi security relations since the late 1940s. Continuing interests in preventing conflict from threatening the political status quo in the Persian Gulf region and from interrupting the continued flow of Saudi oil to international markets remained strong. U.S.-Saudi differences over the Arab-Israeli conflict and other regional issues also persisted. The Clinton Administration's policy of "dual containment" of both Iraq and Iran was supported in part by U.S. military personnel based in Saudi Arabia, 24 of whom were killed and hundreds of whom were injured in two terrorist bombings in Riyadh in 1995 and Dhahran in 1996.⁸

Inside the kingdom, Saudi political activists sought to reopen domestic debates over fiscal policy, constitutional government, and foreign policy that had been largely proscribed by the government since the 1950s and 1960s. Following the 1991 Gulf War, citizens submitted several petitions to King Fahd calling for reform, and several Islamist opposition figures who were critical of the Saudi government were imprisoned. The pan-Islamic solidarity movement that drove Saudi involvement in Afghanistan during the 1980s continued to inspire international activism among Saudis, as private Saudi citizens, Saudi government charitable committees, and international Islamic charity organizations based in the kingdom funneled financial and material support to a range of Muslim groups around the world. This included support for entities and individuals engaged in or victimized by nationalist conflicts in Chechnya, Afghanistan, Bosnia, Kashmir, Kosovo, and the West Bank and Gaza. At times, this support complicated U.S. policy and peacemaking efforts in those regions and, whether directly or indirectly, contributed to the development and sustainment of a transnational network of violent activists, some of whom were affiliated with Al Qaeda. U.S. policy makers' concern about these trends predated the September 11, 2001, terrorist attacks, as evidenced by Clinton Administration's efforts to secure Saudi cooperation with regard to Saudi detainees and citizens suspected of supporting international terrorism.⁹

⁶ These economic initiatives were coordinated in part through the U.S.-Saudi Arabian Joint Commission on Economic Cooperation, which was established in 1974. See Joint Statement on Saudi Arabian-United States Cooperation, June 8, 1974, 26 UST 1689.

⁷ This included Saudi funding of anti-Communist groups that were prohibited from receiving U.S. foreign assistance by Congress, such as the Nicaraguan Contras. See Independent Counsel, Court Record, "U.S. Government Stipulation on Quid Pro Quos with Other Governments as Part of Contra Operation," April 6, 1989, available at <http://www.gwu.edu/~nsarchiv/NSAEBB/NSAEBB210/index.htm>; and Rachel Bronson, Thicker than Oil: America's Uneasy Partnership with Saudi Arabia, Oxford University Press, 2006, pp.168-190.

⁸ See The 9/11 Commission Report, p. 60, and House National Security Committee Staff Report, "The Khobar Towers Bombing Incident," August 14, 1996.

As the first post-Cold War decade of U.S.-Saudi relations came to a close, the bilateral relationship remained strong in traditional areas such as defense cooperation, but showed signs of weakness in other areas. Political ties were challenged by the lingering effects of anti-U.S. terrorist attacks, disagreements over the resurgence of Israeli-Palestinian fighting from late-2000 onward, and basic incompatibilities in some U.S. and Saudi figures' expectations concerning political reform and human rights in the kingdom.

September 11, 2001, and its Aftermath

The direct participation of 15 Saudi nationals in the September 11, 2001, terrorist attacks kindled strong criticism in the United States of Saudi involvement in terrorism or of Saudi laxity in acting against terrorist groups. The attacks constituted the most serious challenge to U.S.-Saudi relations since the 1973-1974 oil embargo, and some analysts have since contended that Al Qaeda planners may have chosen a large number of Saudi participants for the attacks in an attempt to damage U.S.-Saudi relations. Saudi officials have acknowledged the deeply negative effect the attacks had on Saudi Arabia's relations with the United States.¹⁰ Al Qaeda leader Osama Bin Laden is a Saudi national, although Saudi authorities revoked his citizenship in 1994.

Some critical commentators have gone as far as to accuse Saudi government officials of responsibility for the September 11 attacks through design or negligence. Others have taken a longer-term view and argued that Saudi policy decisions over several decades directly or indirectly supported the development of certain types of religious extremism and international terrorism, which now threaten citizens of the United States, Saudi Arabia, and other countries. In particular, many critics of Saudi policies have cited reports that the Saudi government permitted or encouraged fund raising in Saudi Arabia by some charitable religious groups and foundations that espoused extremist ideologies or were linked to or exploited by Al Qaeda and other terrorist groups. As noted above, this trend emerged as an outgrowth of a pan-Islamic solidarity movement in Saudi Arabia that began under King Faisal in the 1960s and 1970s and was embraced by the United States in the 1980s as an asset during the anti-Soviet struggle in Afghanistan.¹¹

⁹ For example, the final report of the National Commission on Terrorist Attacks Upon the United States (the 9/11 Commission) highlights a series of unsuccessful U.S. government efforts to gain access to a senior Al Qaeda financial operative who had been detained by Saudi Arabia in 1997. The report credits the Saudi government with assisting U.S. officials in interviewing members of the bin Laden family in 1999 and 2000.

¹⁰ Current Saudi Ambassador to the United States Adel Al Jubeir famously characterized the revelation that 15 Saudi nationals had participated in the attacks as "a disaster" and argued that "Bin Laden, at that moment, had made in the minds of Americans Saudi Arabia into an enemy." See PBS Frontline, "House of Saud," February 8, 2005. Available at <http://www.pbs.org/wgbh/pages/frontline/shows/saud/>.

¹¹ Saudi antipathy to Communism was based largely on the view that the Soviet Union's atheistic official ideology posed a direct threat to Saudi Arabia and Muslims globally. See Steve Coll, Ghost Wars: The Secret History of the CIA, Afghanistan, and Bin Laden, From the Soviet Invasion to September 10, 2001, Penguin Press: New York, 2004. See also footnote 70 below.

Nevertheless, by the 1990s, Osama bin Laden and other Saudi dissidents had increased their criticism of the Saudi government's domestic and foreign policies and its close relationship with the United States. Bin Laden and his followers declared war on the United States in 1996, ostensibly to secure the withdrawal of U.S. troops from the Arabian Peninsula and the broader Middle East.¹² Following September 11, 2001, Bin Laden sought to justify the attacks as a response to what he and his supporters perceived to be anti-Islamic U.S. policies in the Middle East and other regions. However, Al Qaeda rhetoric condemning secular democracy, U.S. society, and aspects of Western culture leads many observers to question the notion that Bin Laden and other Al Qaeda figures were then or are now motivated by political concerns that can be distinguished from a broader religious or cultural agenda. Al Qaeda attacks in the kingdom following the withdrawal of thousands of U.S. troops in 2003 created further doubts about Al Qaeda's stated motives.

The 9/11 Commission Report

In its final report, released on July 23, 2004, the U.S. National Commission on Terrorist Attacks upon the United States (the 9/11 Commission) described Saudi Arabia as having been “a problematic ally in combating Islamic extremism.” However, the Commission found “no evidence that the Saudi government as an institution or senior Saudi officials individually funded” Al Qaeda. According to the report, Saudi Arabia “was a place where Al Qaeda raised money directly from individuals and through charities,” and indicates that “charities with significant Saudi government sponsorship,” may have diverted funding to Al Qaeda. The report takes note of long-standing cooperative relations between the U.S. and Saudi governments, growing misunderstandings at the popular level, and the U.S. government's desire for Saudi officials to do more to fight terrorism. The report acknowledged increased Saudi efforts in that regard after mid-2003, when terrorists began attacking targets in Saudi Arabia with more frequency.¹³

Saudi Responses

The Saudi government has denied any knowledge of or involvement with the September 11, 2001, attacks and has focused intensely since 2003 on combating the domestic terrorist threat from Al Qaeda in the Arabian Peninsula (AQAP). Members of this group and others inspired by its activities have carried out a number of attacks on civilians, government officials, foreigners, and oil facilities in the kingdom. Saudi officials maintain that they are working closely with the United States against Al Qaeda and its supporters, whom officials on both sides say are targeting both the Saudi regime and the United States. Saudi efforts to confront and control extremist religious beliefs and practices continue, but remain complicated by the ruling regime's historically close relationship with Saudi Arabia's conservative clerical community and by the beliefs and activism of some Saudi citizens (see “Combating Extremism” below).

¹² See CRS Report RL32759, Al Qaeda: Statements and Evolving Ideology, by Christopher M. Blanchard.

¹³ The Commission concluded that the Saudi government had become “locked in mortal combat with Al Qaeda.”

Recent Assessments

U.S. government statements have generally complimented Saudi cooperation with U.S. counterterrorism initiatives since 2003, while sometimes suggesting that the Saudi government can and should do more, particularly with regard to terrorist threats beyond Saudi borders. In its most recent Country Reports on Terrorism, 2008 (published April 30, 2009), the U.S. Department of State praised improvements in Saudi counterterrorism practices, credited Saudi cooperation with U.S. counterterrorism efforts as “significant,” and characterized Saudi anti-extremism initiatives as “aggressive.” The report also stated that “Saudi Arabia needs to continue to take steps to exercise oversight of fundraising activities in the Kingdom and Saudi charitable activities abroad.”

Bush Administration officials routinely praised Saudi domestic counterterrorism efforts, led by Assistant Interior Minister for Security Affairs Prince Mohammed Bin Nayef (see “Counterterrorism” below). Saudi Arabia established a terrorist suspect rehabilitation program and sought to promote it as a model for regional governments. However, questions about the utility of the program in dealing with hardened terrorists have arisen after several participants have rejoined Al Qaeda outside of the kingdom.

Terrorist Financing Concerns

Terrorist financing concerns have proven to be a persistent point of contention.¹⁴ From 2003 onward, Saudi Arabia has established new entities and laws designed specifically to combat terrorist financing in accordance with U.S. and international standards. The 2007 Country Report on Terrorism in Saudi Arabia praised Saudi authorities for arresting dozens of terrorist financing suspects and for enacting new declaration requirements for the cross-border transfer of cash and other high value items. Nevertheless, U.S. counterterrorism officials have continued to express alarm about alleged terrorist financing activities involving Saudi nationals. For example, in April 2008, Undersecretary of the Treasury for Terrorism and Financial Intelligence Stuart Levey stated before the Senate Finance Committee, stating that, Saudi Arabia is “serious about fighting Al Qaeda in the kingdom, and they do,” but that “the seriousness of purpose with respect to the money going out of the kingdom is not as high.” Undersecretary Levey further stated that, at the time, “Saudi Arabia today remains the location from which more money is going to terror groups and the Taliban—Sunni terror groups and the Taliban—than from any other place in the world.”¹⁵ On February 2, 2009, the Obama Administration announced that Undersecretary Levey would continue to serve in his position.

Other U.S. government entities have offered general praise for Saudi efforts, while acknowledging there remains work to be done. In response to questions for the record submitted by Senate Select Committee on Intelligence in February 2009, Director of National Intelligence Admiral Dennis Blair stated:

Al Qaeda and other terrorist organizations continue to seek and obtain funding from private Saudi donors, but Riyadh’s aggressive efforts to identify and disrupt financial facilitators—particularly those associated with Al Qaeda—probably have impeded these efforts... Saudi ¹⁴ See CRS Report RL32499, Saudi Arabia: Terrorist Financing Issues, by Christopher M. Blanchard.

¹⁵ Testimony of U.S. Department of the Treasury Undersecretary for Terrorism and Financial Intelligence Stuart A. Levey before the Senate Finance Committee, April 1, 2008.

Arabia aggressively targets Al Qaeda-associated financial facilitators, but has historically taken little action against the supporters of other groups that play into Riyadh's domestic and foreign policy calculations, and do not pose a direct threat to the kingdom.¹⁶

The 2009 U.S. State Department International Narcotics Control Strategy Report on money laundering concludes that Saudi Arabia “continues to be a significant jurisdictional source for terrorist financing worldwide” and notes that the Saudi government “continues to take aggressive action to target direct threats to the Kingdom, but could do more to target Saudi-based support for extremism outside of Saudi's borders.” Specifically the report calls on Saudi authorities to “hold terrorist financiers publicly accountable through prosecutions and full implementation of United Nations Security Council obligations” and “to establish a charities oversight mechanism that also oversees ‘multilateral organizations’ and enhances its oversight and control of Saudi entities with overseas operations.” The 2010 report did not include an entry for Saudi Arabia.

Saudi officials insist that their efforts to combat terrorist financing are intensive and robust and are not limited to actions taken against entities or individuals that pose internal threats to the kingdom. In December 2008, the Saudi Arabian Monetary Agency (SAMA) issued new bank account regulations that appear to significantly strengthen the rules regarding charitable organizations, including so-called ‘multilateral organizations’ that have been of concern to U.S. terrorist financing officials.¹⁷

A September 2009 Government Accountability Office (GAO) report found that:

U.S. and Saudi officials also report progress on efforts to prevent financial support to extremists, citing, for example, the Saudi government's regulations on sending charitable contributions overseas, and the arrest and prosecution of individuals providing support for terrorism. However, U.S. officials remain concerned about the ability of Saudi individuals and charitable organizations to support terrorism outside of Saudi Arabia, and noted limited Saudi enforcement capacity and terrorists' use of cash couriers as challenges.¹⁸

Toward a New Relationship?

Following the last severe test of U.S.-Saudi relations in the early 1970s, Saudi and U.S. officials engaged in a multi-track effort to re-anchor the bilateral relationship on a range of joint military and economic commitments. Official political relations recovered and remained close, but a degree of public mistrust persisted on both sides. Several contentious debates regarding proposed U.S. arms sales to Saudi Arabia in the 1980s and 1990s demonstrated this mistrust; some Members of Congress and others made evident their doubts about Saudi Arabia's reliability as an ally, and some Saudi officials questioned the reliability of U.S. commitments to Saudi Arabia.

Saudi support for the coalition response to the Iraqi invasion of Kuwait in 1990 helped mitigate some of those mutual doubts, but created conditions that ultimately made it more challenging for officials on both sides to publicly defend the bilateral relationship. Saudi officials faced withering criticism from some quarters for inviting foreign military forces into the kingdom, for hosting U.S. troops after the end of major combat operations against Iraq, and for continuing to cooperate with the United States diplomatically, in spite of U.S. airstrikes on Iraq and ongoing U.S. support for Israel. The Bush and Clinton Administrations sought to justify continuing military cooperation and arms sales initiatives with Saudi Arabia for strategic reasons amid growing U.S. concern about human rights and political reform in the kingdom, terrorist attacks on U.S. forces stationed there, and increasing U.S. awareness that some Saudi citizens were espousing religious extremism and supporting international terrorism.

¹⁶ Office of the Director of National Intelligence, Questions for the Record submitted to the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence, February 12, 2009.

¹⁷ Saudi Arabia Monetary Agency, Rules Governing the Opening of Bank Accounts and General Operational Guidelines in Saudi Arabia, Third Update, December 2008.

¹⁸ GAO-09-883, U.S. Agencies Report Progress Countering Terrorism and Its Financing in Saudi Arabia, but Continued Focus on Counter Terrorism Financing Efforts Needed, September 2009.

The September 11, 2001, terrorist attacks compounded the effects of these negative factors in both the official and broader public spheres. The 9/11 Commission Report recommendations directly addressed the resulting challenges which continue to complicate the U.S.-Saudi official relationship:

The problems in the U.S.-Saudi relationship must be confronted, openly. The United States and Saudi Arabia must determine if they can build a relationship that political leaders on both sides are prepared to publicly defend—a relationship about more than oil. It should include a shared commitment to political and economic reform, as Saudis make common cause with the outside world. It should include a shared interest in greater tolerance and cultural respect, translating into a commitment to fight the violent extremists who foment hatred.¹⁹

Under the Bush Administration, the Saudi and U.S. governments sought to maintain the mutual strategic benefits of existing cooperative arrangements while managing the potential negative side effects of policy differences and working level disagreements. In 2005, the United States and Saudi Arabia established a cabinet-level strategic dialogue to address issues of mutual importance. Six associated working groups met “as needed” to discuss (1) counterterrorism; (2) military affairs; (3) energy; (4) economic and financial affairs; (5) partnership, education, exchange, and human development; and (6) consular affairs.²⁰

The relative strengthening of Iran as a regional power since 2001 has helped provide a new strategic logic for official U.S.-Saudi cooperation. However, U.S. military engagement in Iraq and Afghanistan, fluctuating oil prices, and dilatory Saudi action on some reform and counterterrorism issues continued to complicate public relations. In May 2008, one former U.S. Ambassador to Saudi Arabia characterized the state of U.S.-Saudi relations as reflecting “an odd disconnect,” in which, in his view, there has been “recognition on the part of the governments in both countries that this is a very important relationship. But in both cases, the public is extremely negative. Saudi Arabia has been successfully vilified in American politics, and the United States is now extraordinarily unpopular in Saudi Arabia.”²¹

Efforts to restore and redefine U.S.-Saudi partnership continued during the term of the 110th Congress. Section 2043 of P.L. 110-53 (the Implementing the 9/11 Commission

¹⁹ National Commission on Terrorist Attacks Upon the United States, Final Report, p. 374.

²⁰ H.Con.Res. 202 (referred to the House Committee on Foreign Affairs on August 3, 2007) called on the Administration to create an additional working group to address human rights.

²¹ Ambassador Chas Freeman, President of the Middle East Policy Council, served as U.S. Ambassador to Saudi Arabia from 1989 to 1992. Tabassum Zakaria, “Analysis—Saudi smile likely for Bush on oil plea, not more,” Reuters, May 12, 2008.

Recommendations Act of 2007) required the Bush Administration to report on the long-term strategy of the United States to work with the Saudi government to facilitate political, economic, and social reforms, including greater religious freedom, and to combat terrorism, including efforts to prevent and prohibit terrorist financing by Saudi institutions and citizens. The report was transmitted to the Congress on January 30, 2008, and described a “multi-dimensional” U.S. approach to achieving goals for relations with Saudi Arabia.²²

The extent to which the Obama Administration and the 111th Congress will seek to reinforce that strategy or chart a new course for U.S.-Saudi relations remains to be seen. In October 2009, U.S. Ambassador to Saudi Arabia James Smith emphasized his views on the importance of “taking down walls” in the bilateral relationship and expanding U.S.-Saudi partnerships in education, trade, and investment. Addressing the 2009 National Council on U.S.-Arab Relations Policymakers Conference in Washington, DC, Ambassador Smith argued:

...it is not 2001. It is not 2003. And it is not 2004. So if you are an American and you formed an opinion about Saudi Arabia or Saudis in the aftermath of 9/11, it is time to rethink your position. If you are a Saudi and you formed an opinion about the United States and Americans in the aftermath of 9/11 it is time to rethink your opinion. That was eight years ago.²³

Recent Bilateral Agreements

On the eve of President Bush’s May 2008 visit to Riyadh to commemorate the 75th anniversary of the establishment of U.S.-Saudi relations, then-U.S. National Security Adviser Stephen Hadley argued that the U.S.-Saudi relationship was in “pretty good shape.”²⁴ In conjunction with President Bush’s visit, his Administration announced a series of agreements designed to strengthen bilateral relations in key areas:

- Civil Nuclear Cooperation—Both governments signed a Memorandum of Understanding on Civil Nuclear Energy Cooperation under which the United States agreed to “assist the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia to develop civilian nuclear energy for use in medicine, industry, and power generation and will help in development of both the human and infrastructure resources in accordance with evolving International Atomic Energy Agency guidance and standards.”²⁵
- Enhanced Security Arrangements—Saudi Arabia agreed to join the Global Initiative to Combat Nuclear Terrorism and the Proliferation Security Initiative, both of which are multilateral initiatives aimed at reducing the threats posed by weapons of mass destruction proliferation, terrorism, and related activities. A White House statement released prior to President Bush’s visit indicated that “the United States and Saudi Arabia have agreed to cooperate in safeguarding the kingdom’s energy resources by protecting key infrastructure, enhancing Saudi border security, and meeting Saudi Arabia’s expanding energy needs in an

²² U.S. Department of State, U.S. Strategy Toward Saudi Arabia, Report Pursuant to Section 2043c of the Implementing the Recommendations of the 9/11 Commission Act, P.L. 110-53, January 30, 2008.

²³ Ambassador James Smith, Remarks to Arab-U.S. Policymakers Conference, Washington, DC, October 15, 2009.

²⁴ Tabassum Zakaria, “Analysis—Saudi smile likely for Bush on oil plea, not more,” Reuters, May 12, 2008.

²⁵ U.S. Department of State, Office of the Spokesman, “Media Note: U.S.-Saudi Arabia Memorandum of Understanding on Nuclear Energy Cooperation,” May 16, 2008.

environmentally responsible manner.”²⁶ Under Secretary of State for Political Affairs William Burns said in April 2009 that the United States and Saudi Arabia are working to launch a training program that will provide Saudi security forces with expertise to protect critical energy infrastructure.²⁷ See “Office of Program Management Ministry of Interior – Facilities Security Forces (OPM MOI-FSF)” below.

- Reciprocal Visa Policies—Both governments agreed to issue business and tourist visas to each others’ citizens on reciprocal terms: valid for five years, with multiple entries. Both governments also agreed to issue student visas valid for the duration of the student’s study program, up to a maximum of five years, without two-year renewal requirements. The number of non-immigrant visas issued to Saudi nationals has returned to its pre-9/11 level, with over 50,000 issued in 2009. See “Consular Issues” below for more information.

Recent Congressional Interest in Saudi Arabia

The September 11 terrorist attacks created an atmosphere of skepticism about U.S.-Saudi relations that has characterized much of the discourse in Congress on Saudi Arabia since late 2001. During the 107th and 108th Congresses, some Members of Congress frequently criticized what they perceived to be Saudi policies that may have contributed to the development of terrorist threats to the United States and other countries. In the 109th Congress, some Members’ perspectives evolved to reflect a degree of solidarity with Saudi citizens in the face of Al Qaeda terrorist attacks inside Saudi Arabia, amid persistent concerns about the Saudi government’s counterterrorism policies, reform efforts, and positions toward Iraq and the Israeli-Palestinian conflict. Many Members of Congress have acknowledged Saudi domestic counterterrorism efforts as significant, while continuing to raise questions about Saudi efforts to combat religious extremism and to support U.S. counterterrorism and regional policies.

During the 110th Congress, issues of mutual interest to Members of Congress and Saudi Arabian officials included the conflict in Iraq, Iran’s nuclear technology development efforts, Saudi political and economic reform efforts, Saudi oil policies, counterterrorism cooperation, and new initiatives to revive dormant Israeli-Arab peace negotiations. These issues, along with Afghanistan, Pakistan, and security cooperation have remained at the top of the agenda for U.S. and Saudi leaders during the term of the 111th Congress. Since January 2009, the Obama Administration and the 111th Congress have continued the established patterns of foreign assistance, security cooperation, and arms sales described below, and Members of Congress have continued to express varied views on the future of U.S.-Saudi relations.

²⁶ The White House, Office of the Press Secretary, “Fact Sheet: Strengthening Diplomatic Ties with Saudi Arabia,” May 16, 2008.

²⁷ Remarks of Under Secretary of State William Burns, New America Foundation Conference – “U.S.-Saudi Relations in a World Without Equilibrium,” Washington, D.C., April 27, 2009.

U.S. Foreign Assistance to Saudi Arabia and Congressional Prohibitions

U.S. foreign assistance programs for Saudi Arabia have been a consistent point of contention between some Members of Congress and the Bush and Obama Administrations since 2001. Some Members of Congress have criticized the provision of U.S. foreign assistance to Saudi Arabia by arguing that robust Saudi oil revenues make U.S. assistance unnecessary or by citing security and terrorism concerns about Saudi government policies. Others have argued that security-related support for the Saudi Arabian government is necessary and important in order to help Saudis confront the threat of Al Qaeda terrorism in their country, to protect Saudi infrastructure critical to ensuring global oil supplies, to secure Saudi support for U.S. counterterrorism priorities overseas, to bolster Saudi Arabia against a potential threat from Iran, and to ensure continuing U.S. access to and cooperation with the Saudi armed forces.

From 1946 through 2007, the United States provided Saudi Arabia with $333.1 million (current dollars) in foreign assistance funding, of which $294.8 million was military assistance and $38.3 million was economic assistance.²⁸ Significant U.S. military training and advisory programs in Saudi Arabia have continued in various forms since the mid-1940s. Currently, these programs include the United States Training Mission to Saudi Arabia (USMTM, established 1953) and the Saudi Arabian National Guard Modernization Program (PM-SANG, established 1973). The costs of these training programs are paid by the Saudi government through Foreign Military Sales purchases (see “U.S.-Saudi Military Cooperation” below).

International Military Education and Training (IMET)

The Bush Administration and Obama Administration annually have requested limited funding for a small International Military Education and Training (IMET) program for Saudi Arabia since FY2003. Like its predecessor, the Obama Administration supports Saudi IMET participation because it reduces the cost to the Saudi government of other training purchases²⁹ and provides a range of benefits for U.S.-Saudi military to military relations. According to the U.S. Department of Defense and U.S. Department of State:

Providing minimal IMET to Saudi Arabia permits them to purchase military training at the significantly reduced Foreign Military Sale (FMS) incremental rate ensuring a continued high level of Saudi attendance at U.S. military institutions; enhances technical capabilities; exposes all levels of Saudi military personnel and their families to U.S. values, ideas, and policies; and increases awareness of international norms of human rights, the principle of civilian control of the military, and the rule of law.³⁰

²⁸ U.S. Agency for International Development [USAID], U.S. Overseas Loans and Grants, Obligations and Loan Authorizations. Available at <http://quesdb.usaid.gov/gbk/>.

²⁹ Section 21(c) of P.L.90-629, the Arms Export Control Act (AECA), states that IMET recipient countries are eligible to purchase non-IMET training at reduced cost. Section 108(a) of P.L. 99-83 amended the AECA to provide this reduced cost benefit to IMET recipients. The U.S. Defense Security Cooperation Agency (DSCA) implements the authority provided in P.L. 99-83 to apply a lower cost to U.S. military training purchased by Saudi Arabia and other IMET recipient countries through the Foreign Military Sales (FMS) program. At present, the “incremental rates” applied to the FMS training purchases of IMET recipient countries are calculated according to the terms outlined in Department of Defense Financial Management Regulation (FMR), Volume 15, Chapter 7 (Sections 0711 and 0712).

³⁰ U.S. Department of Defense and U.S. Department of State Joint Report to Congress on Foreign Military Training In (continued...)

The Obama Administration requested $65,000 in IMET funds for Saudi Arabia in FY2010, but estimates that it will provide only $8,000.³¹ For FY2011, the Administration is requesting $10,000 in IMET for the kingdom.

Table 1 displays the number of Saudi students receiving U.S. military training from FY2002 through FY2007, with the total dollar value of the training purchased by the Saudi government (see below). For FY2003 through FY2007, this total value includes courses purchased using nominal amounts of IMET assistance. The value of IMET-funded training is provided in Table 2 below. The net value of the reduction in cost for other non-IMET training purchased by Saudi Arabia and other IMET recipient countries through the Foreign Military Sale (FMS) program is not regularly reported by the Defense Security Cooperation Agency (DSCA). However, the conference report on the FY2010 Consolidated Appropriations Act (H.R. 3288, H.Rept. 111-366) requires the Administration to report on these net savings within 180 days (by June 14, 2010).

Table 1. U.S. Military Training Provided to Saudi Personnel

	FY2002	FY2003	FY2004	FY2005	FY2006	FY2007
Students Trained	1,110	1,664	596	416	524	849 ^a
Value ($ million)	$57.4	$20.2	$21.1	$11.2	$8.9	$39.2

Source: U.S. Department of Defense and U.S. Department of State Joint Reports to Congress on Foreign Military Training, FY2002-FY2008. Available at <http://www.state.gov/t/pm/rls/rpt/fmtrpt/>.

- a. Of these students, one was trained via the IMET program, and over 700 were trained via Foreign Military Sales training purchased by Saudi Arabia.

Counterterrorism Assistance

The Obama Administration has requested $400,000 in export control and related border security funds (Non-proliferation, Anti-terrorism, Demining and Related programs account, NADR-EXBS) for Saudi Arabia in FY2010 (see Table 2 below). The Administration now estimates it will reduce its obligation to $200,000 in NADR to continue U.S. programs to improve Saudi border enforcement capabilities, specifically as a means of combating weapons of mass destruction and small arms trafficking. The Bush Administration requested and Congress appropriated similar funds for Saudi Arabia from FY2001 through FY2003. The assistance supported a program to improve Saudi export laws and enforcement procedures. Anti-terrorism assistance (NADR-ATA) was provided in FY2005 in the form of VIP protection courses for Saudi security officers along with counterterrorism financing assistance (NADR-CTF). Assistance in FY2006 funded crisis management training and counterterrorism financing courses related to bulk cash smuggling. The Bush Administration obligated $300,000 in NADR-ATA funding for Fiscal Years 2006 and 2007, Volume I, August 2007. Available at <http://www.state.gov/t/pm/rls/rpt/fmtrpt/2007/>.

(...continued)

³¹ According to the State Department Congressional Budget Justification for FY2010, "U.S. assistance will encourage Saudi Arabia's continued participation in U.S. military, education and training programs. This level of funding permits the Saudi government to purchase military training in the United States at considerably lower cost than is charged countries that are not eligible for military, education and training funds. Military training enhances interoperability with U.S. forces, promotes military professionalism and respect for human rights. It also builds Saudi defensive capacities, and reinforces the importance of a strong, cooperative political and military relationship between American and Saudi military officers."

Saudi Arabia for FY2007 and requested $100,000 for FY2008, which was planned, in part, to support Saudi efforts to establish a national counterterrorism center. For FY2009, the Bush Administration requested $350,000 in NADR-EXBS.

Table 2. U.S. Assistance to Saudi Arabia, FY2004-FY2011

($ thousand)

	FY2004	FY2005 ^a	FY2006 ^a	FY2007 ^c
IMET ^b	$23.5	$6.9	$20.3	$19.0
NADR-EXBS	-	-	-	-
NADR-ATA	-	760 ^c	$1,387.0	$300.0
NADR-CTF	-	$200.0	$189.0	-
Annual Total	$23.5	$966.9	$1,576.0	$319.0

	FY2008	FY2009	FY2010 Estimate	FY2011 Request
IMET ^b	.. ^d	$11.0	$8.0	$10.0
NADR-EXBS	-	$350.0	$200.0	$360.0
NADR-ATA	$99.0	-	-	-
NADR-CTF	-	-	-	-
Annual Total	$113.0	$361.0	$208.0	$370.0

Sources: U.S. Department of State - Congressional Budget Justifications for Foreign Operations FY2004-FY2010; and, U.S. Department of Defense and U.S. Department of State Joint Report to Congress on Foreign Military Training, Fiscal Years 2002-2007.

- The Administration requested $24,000 in IMET and $100,000 in NADR-CTF funds for FY2006. In late 2005, $25,000 in no-year funds were obligated for IMET programming for Saudi Arabia.
- FY2003-FY2006 IMET figures contained in the Joint Reports to Congress on Foreign Military Training, Fiscal Years 2002-2006. FY2007 IMET figure based on FY2007 Country Aid Allocation Report by Account (653a Report), June 2007.
- FY2007 Country Aid Allocation Report by Account (653a Report), June 2007.
- On September 20, 2007, the Bush Administration notified the Congress of its intention to use $15,800 in unobligated no-year IMET funds appropriated in 2002 to support the IMET program with Saudi Arabia. See Executive Communication 3416. A letter from the Director, Defense Security Cooperation Agency, transmitting notification of the intention to use unobligated X-year IMET funds appropriated in fiscal year 2002 for Saudi Arabia, pursuant to the Foreign Operations, Export Financing and Related Programs Appropriations Act, 2002, P.L. 107-115; jointly to the Committees on Foreign Affairs and Appropriations.

Prohibitions on Foreign Assistance

During congressional consideration of appropriations for FY2004 through FY2008, several proposals to prohibit the extension of U.S. foreign assistance to Saudi Arabia were considered and adopted by Congress.³² As the total amount of U.S. assistance to Saudi Arabia has been relatively minuscule in recent years, the practical effect of the prohibitions was to rescind Saudi Arabia's eligibility for certain counterterrorism and border security assistance as well as its ability to purchase U.S. military training at a reduced cost, absent the issuance of presidential waivers or the assertion of existing executive authority. As noted above, some supporters of the prohibitions raised questions regarding Saudi Arabia's reliability as a counterterrorism partner, while opponents of the assistance bans argued that the provisions would unnecessarily jeopardize continuance of cooperative diplomatic and security efforts with a long-standing regional ally. Each legislative proposal has differed in its cited reasons for prohibiting aid as well as whether or not it provided national security waiver authority for the President.³³

³² The prohibition on FY2006 foreign assistance to Saudi Arabia contained in Section 582 of P.L. 109-102 was carried forward in subsequent continuing appropriations resolutions for FY2007 (P.L. 110-5) and FY2008 (P.L. 110-92). On (continued...)

Section 697 of Division J of P.L. 110-161, the FY2008 Consolidated Appropriations Act, prohibited the use of funds appropriated by the act for assistance to Saudi Arabia, but provides waiver authority for the President. President Bush did not issue a waiver applicable to the FY2008 funds appropriated by P.L. 110-161. The FY2008 prohibition was originally carried forward under the terms of the Continuing Appropriations Resolution, 2009, P.L. 110-329. However, the Omnibus Appropriations Act, 2009 (P.L. 111-8) did not contain such a prohibition for FY2009 funds.

FY2010 Appropriations Debate

The assistance prohibition debate resurfaced during consideration of FY2010 appropriations legislation. When reported from committee, Section 7041 of the House version of the FY2010 Foreign Operations Appropriations bill (H.R. 3081) would have prohibited the obligation or expenditure of funds appropriated by the act for Saudi Arabia unless the Obama Administration certified Saudi counterterrorism cooperation. On July 9, 2009, the House adopted an amendment (H.Amdt. 309) by a vote of 297 to 135 (Roll no. 519) that withdrew the certification exception. During floor debate on July 9, 2009, Representative Anthony Weiner, the sponsor of the amendment and several amendments adopted in previous years seeking to prohibit assistance to Saudi Arabia, argued that the inclusion of the waiver provision undermined the expressed will of Congress regarding funds appropriated to the president.³⁴ Opponents of the amendment argued that a complete prohibition on assistance could undermine U.S.-Saudi security relations and would unduly tie the hands of the Obama Administration.

(...continued)

June 9, 2006, the House adopted H.Amdt. 997 to H.R. 5522 (Foreign Operations Appropriations Act, FY2007) by a vote of 312-97 (Roll no. 244); this amendment would have prohibited U.S. assistance to Saudi Arabia during FY2007 and contained no presidential waiver. On October 19, 2007, President Bush certified that Saudi Arabia was "cooperating with efforts to combat international terrorism" and waived the prohibition on the use of funds appropriated in P.L. 109-102 and in the continuing appropriations resolutions for FY2007 (P.L. 110-5) and FY2008 (P.L. 110-92) for foreign assistance to Saudi Arabia. (See Presidential Determination Relating to Assistance for Saudi Arabia (No. 2008-5), October 19, 2007.)

³³ For example, the House version of the FY2008 Foreign Operations Appropriations bill (Section 699N of H.R. 2764 EH) would have prohibited the use of appropriated FY2008 funds for assistance to Saudi Arabia, including under authority granted to the President by Section 571 or 614 of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961. It did not provide waiver authority for the President. The Senate version of the bill did not include a similar provision. See H.Amdt. 389, adopted by voice vote on June 21, 2007. For consideration see Congressional Record (CR), June 22, 2007 (H6941-H6942); for text, (H6941-H6942).

³⁴ Congressional Record, House of Representatives, July 09, 2009, pp. H7895-H7897.

The Senate Committee on Appropriations reported a version of the FY2010 Foreign Operations Appropriations bill (S. 1434) that did not prohibit assistance to Saudi Arabia. The conference agreement on the FY2010 Consolidated Appropriations Act included the assistance prohibition language from the House bill, but reinstated a national interest waiver authority for the Secretary of State (Section 7041 of P.L. 111-117).

Other related legislation in the 111th Congress includes the Prohibit Aid to Saudi Arabia Act of 2009 (H.R. 792, introduced February 2, 2009), which would prohibit any and all “funds appropriated or otherwise made available pursuant to an Act making appropriations for the Department of State, foreign operations, and related programs” from being “obligated or expended to finance directly any assistance or reparations to Saudi Arabia.”

U.S. Arms Sales to Saudi Arabia

Background

The United States has long been Saudi Arabia’s leading arms supplier. From 1950 through 2006, Saudi Arabia purchased and received from the United States weapons, military equipment, and related services through Foreign Military Sales (FMS) worth over $62.7 billion and foreign military construction services (FMCS) worth over $17.1 billion (figures in historical dollars). These figures represent approximately 19% of all FMS deliveries and 85% of all FMCS deliveries made worldwide during this period. The largest single recent U.S. foreign military sale to Saudi Arabia was a $9 billion contract for 72 F-15S fighter aircraft. The contract was signed in May 1993, and delivery of the F-15S aircraft was completed in 1999.

The overthrow of Saddam Hussein’s regime in Iraq removed the primary conventional military threat to Saudi Arabia’s security. According to many military experts, Saudi Arabia enjoys some qualitative conventional military advantages over Iran, its larger, more populous neighbor and primary peer competitor in the Gulf region. These advantages are expected to grow, and key Saudi deficiencies in areas such as naval technology are expected to diminish as a multi-year Saudi defense investment initiative continues. Saudi officials have announced their intention to devote $50-60 billion to upgrading existing weapons systems, improving command and control, and expanding the size, training, and capabilities of the Saudi armed forces.³⁵

From January 2005 through January 2009, the Bush Administration and Congress approved a number of potential³⁶ U.S. military sales to Saudi Arabia with a possible combined value of over ³⁵ A downward trend in Saudi arms procurement prevailed from the mid-1990s through 2003 as Saudi Arabia completed payments for many of its post-Gulf War purchases and the country faced strained finances. Higher oil prices, perceived regional threats, and counterterrorism requirements led Saudi officials to reassess their defense and security needs and procurement plans in light of recent developments. Purchases from the United States and other suppliers have increased accordingly. From 2004 through 2007, Saudi Arabia made arms agreements worth $23.2 billion (in current dollars), including deals signed with four major European suppliers ($16.9 billion) and the United States ($5.2 billion). For more information, see CRS Report RL34723, Conventional Arms Transfers to Developing Nations, 2000-2007, by Richard F. Grimmett.

³⁶ The Defense Security Cooperation Agency (DSCA) notifies Congress of the potential value of sales, because the final value of actual sales may change once congressional approval is granted and contracts are signed. DSCA officials report that the notified totals reflect an approximate upper limit of the potential value of a given sale. Author interview with DSCA officials, Arlington, Virginia, December 12, 2007.

$16.7 billion.³⁷ For the period 2005 through 2008, the Defense Security Cooperation Agency reports that the United States and Saudi Arabia concluded FMS agreements worth $11.2 billion, and the United States delivered $4.4 billion in FMS purchased defense goods and services to Saudi Arabia.³⁸ Since January 2009, the Obama Administration has notified Congress of potential sales with a possible combined value of an additional $2.2 billion. In spite of ongoing equipment and training improvements, some security analysts believe that Saudi Arabia will remain dependent on the United States to serve as the ultimate guarantor of its security from conventional external threats. Saudi armed forces successfully compelled Yemeni rebels to withdraw from Saudi territory in late 2009 and early 2010. Saudi Arabia has not indicated that it relied on any extraordinary U.S. material support or advisory assistance for the operation, although public accounts suggest that U.S. origin weaponry was used extensively during the campaign.

Unconventional threats from Iran, the threat of domestic terrorism, and the residual effects of continuing instability in Iraq, Yemen, and Pakistan now constitute the primary threats to Saudi national security. Counterterrorism, intelligence, and border security improvements are ongoing to respond to these threats, and the United States is seeking to improve the deterrent and defensive capabilities of Saudi and other Gulf Cooperation Council (GCC) militaries vis-à-vis Iran. The Bush Administration sought to coordinate these efforts with other GCC countries via a U.S. initiative known as the Gulf Security Dialogue.³⁹ However, the Obama Administration has continued to engage with Saudi Arabia on these security issues using established bilateral mechanisms (see below). U.S. and Saudi officials report that future arms sale requests and proposals will be determined by joint assessments of Saudi defense needs and regional security conditions. Recent arms sale proposals are detailed in the Appendix A.

Criticism and Action in the 110th Congress

Members of Congress have not initiated a coordinated bicameral legislative effort to block or significantly modify any U.S. arms sales to any of the GCC states since the early 1990s. However, some in Congress have expressed reservations about sale of sophisticated weaponry and armament packages to the Gulf states, including Saudi Arabia, in recent years. Debate in the 110th Congress over weapons sales to the GCC states in general, and to Saudi Arabia in particular, largely mirrored past congressional debate over the sale of major weapons systems to these countries. As of May 2010, the 111th Congress had not engaged in significant public debate over proposed arms sales to Saudi Arabia.

Nevertheless, some Members of Congress continue to express concern that sales of sophisticated weaponry to the GCC states have the potential to erode Israel's "qualitative military edge" (often referred to as QME) over its Arab neighbors if those states choose to join in any potential joint Arab military action against Israel. Section 201 of the Naval Vessel Transfer Act of 2008 (P.L. 110-429) requires the President to conduct "an empirical and qualitative assessment of the extent to which Israel possesses a qualitative military edge over military threats to Israel" by June 30, 2009, and every four years thereafter. The Act further amends Section 36 of the Arms Export ³⁷ DSCA notification press releases are available at http://www.dsca.mil/PressReleases/36-b/36b_index.htm.

³⁸ For more information, see CRS Report R40959, U.S. Arms Sales: Agreements with and Deliveries to Major Clients, 2001-2008, by Richard F. Grimmett.

³⁹ For more information see CRS Report RL34322, The Gulf Security Dialogue and Related Arms Sale Proposals, by Christopher M. Blanchard and Richard F. Grimmett.

Control Act to require certifications for proposed arms sales “to any country in the Middle East other than Israel” to include “a determination that the sale or export of the defense articles or defense services will not adversely affect Israel’s qualitative military edge over military threats to Israel.” The Act defines QME as follows:

the ability to counter and defeat any credible conventional military threat from any individual state or possible coalition of states or from non-state actors, while sustaining minimal damages and casualties, through the use of superior military means, possessed in sufficient quantity, including weapons, command, control, communication, intelligence, surveillance, and reconnaissance capabilities that in their technical characteristics are superior in capability to those of such other individual or possible coalition of states or non-state actors.

Others have expressed concerns about the fate of U.S. weaponry exports should currently allied Gulf governments suffer abrupt regime changes. Successive U.S. Administrations have maintained that Saudi Arabia and the other Gulf states are too dependent on U.S. training, spare parts, and technology to be in a position to use sophisticated U.S.-made arms against Israel or any other U.S. ally under current conditions or in the event of significant regime changes.⁴⁰ By all accounts, Saudi officials continue to view U.S. willingness to sell sophisticated military technology to Saudi Arabia as an indicator of the strength of U.S. commitments to Saudi security and the health of the broader bilateral relationship.

Proposed Sale of Joint Direct Attack Munitions (JDAMs)

On January 14, 2008, the Bush Administration formally notified Congress of a proposal to sell 900 Joint Direct Attack Munition (JDAM) bomb guidance kits to Saudi Arabia (Defense Security Cooperation Agency (DSCA) Transmittal No. 08-18). During the 110th Congress, a joint resolution of disapproval (H.J.Res. 76) was introduced in the House to prohibit the proposed sale, but the resolution was not considered within the 30-day period specified by the Arms Export Control Act. In May 2008, a bill (S.J.Res. 32) disapproving of the proposed JDAM sale and three other proposed sales was introduced in the Senate. S.J.Res. 32 sought to link approval of four proposed arms sales to Saudi willingness to increase oil production.

As of September 2009, DSCA reported that Letters of Offer and Acceptance for the sale of JDAM warheads and bomb bodies to Saudi Arabia had been signed, along with a contract for 900 warheads scheduled for delivery in 2011.⁴¹ Congress may take legislative action to modify or prevent the sale at any point up to the physical transfer of Foreign Military Sale items. In the Middle East region, to date, the United States has sold JDAM kits to Israel, the United Arab Emirates, and Oman. From August 2007 through January 2009, the Bush Administration notified Congress of proposals to sell 10,000 JDAM kits to Israel and 200 JDAM kits to the United Arab Emirates.

⁴⁰ Gopal Ratnam and Amy Svitak, “U.S. Would Keep Tight Rein on Missile Sold to Bahrain,” Defense News, September 11, 2000. The U.S. Department of State and the Defense Security Cooperation Agency routinely offer briefings to Members of Congress and congressional and committee staff regarding proposed Foreign Military Sales to Saudi Arabia and other countries.

⁴¹ CRS analyst correspondence with DSCA officials, September 15, 2009.

BAE Corruption Inquiry

In February 2010, the U.S. Department of Justice announced a $400 million settlement in its long-running investigation of British defense contractor BAE Systems plc and its U.S. subsidiary BAE Systems Incorporated for “suspicious payments... in numerous jurisdictions around the world, including in the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia.”⁴² In accordance with the settlement, BAE pled guilty to violations of the Arms Export Control Act and International Traffic in Arms Regulations that stemmed from its failure to report to the U.S. State Department commission payments used to secure sales of items subject to U.S. export licenses.⁴³ The court filings note BAE’s commitment as of the year 2000 for both its U.S. and non-U.S. divisions to abide by the requirements of the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act (FCPA), but do not charge BAE with a violation of the FCPA in connection with past arms sales and commission payments to Saudi Arabia and other countries.⁴⁴

BAE has agreed to a number of reform requirements as a condition of the settlement including a restatement of its commitment for all of its entities to abide by the terms of the FCPA. Some legal observers have characterized the Department’s decision not to charge BAE with a violation of the FCPA as a “creative” solution to policy challenges that could have resulted if BAE were found guilty of violating the FCPA and subsequently prohibited from contracting with the United States government and military.⁴⁵ The Department of Justice noted in its sentencing memorandum that BAE Systems plc “is the world’s second largest defense contractor and the fifth largest provider of defense materials to the United States government.”

Courts in the United Kingdom are reviewing a parallel plea bargain and £30 million fine agreement struck between BAE and Britain’s Serious Fraud Office (SFO) in February 2010. British press reports have long alleged that BAE executives made illegal payments to Saudi officials in support of a multi-billion dollar, decade-long arms-for-oil barter treaty known as Al Yamamah.⁴⁶ BAE officials and Saudi authorities have denied any wrongdoing and claim that any and all payments associated with the deal were legal and reflected commonly understood terms of government-to-government sale agreements between the United Kingdom and Saudi Arabia. BAE sales to other countries also were subject to SFO scrutiny.

⁴² United States of America V. BAE Systems plc, United States’ Sentencing Memorandum, Criminal No.: 1:10-Cr-035 (Jdb), February 22, 2010.

⁴³ According to the Department of Justice, BAE “consistently failed to identify commissions paid to third parties to assist in securing the sales of defense articles that were the subject of export licenses... The undisclosed payments were tolerated or condoned up to the highest corporate levels.” Ibid.

⁴⁴ The Department of Justice sentencing memorandum states: “BAES made some third-party payments while aware that there was a high probability that part of the funds would be passed on to a foreign government official to influence a decision in favor of BAES. BAES made other payments aware that there was a high probability that the payments would be used to influence government decision makers in the purchase of defense materials. Regardless of the true identities of the ultimate recipients of the funds, BAES intentionally failed to create mechanisms to ensure its compliance with the FCPA and failed properly to identify and disclose to the State Department commission payments as required by the AECA and ITAR in connection with the sales and exports of defense articles and services.” Ibid.

⁴⁵ Sue Reisinger, “Don’t Call It Bribery; A creative criminal plea means that BAE can still do business with the government,” Corporate Counsel, Volume 12; Issue 5, May 1, 2010.

⁴⁶ Detailed press coverage of the allegations is available from the British newspaper The Guardian at <http://www.guardian.co.uk/world/bae>.

The SFO dropped its original investigation into BAE-Saudi dealings in 2006 when ordered to do so by the government of then-Prime Minister Tony Blair.⁴⁷ The Blair government determined that the continuation of the SFO investigation, which was seeking access to Swiss bank records involving Saudi royal family members, constituted a threat to U.K. national security. This determination was based on alleged Saudi threats to withdraw terrorism-related intelligence cooperation or to cancel a then-pending arms sale agreement for U.K.-produced Typhoon aircraft if the SFO investigation did not cease.⁴⁸ Britain's High Court overturned the SFO decision to drop the case in April 2008 and criticized what it deemed the Blair government's willingness to "surrender" to alleged Saudi threats, which, in the court's view jeopardized "the integrity of the criminal justice system."⁴⁹ The British government won its subsequent appeal of the High Court ruling, with the House of Lords finding that the SFO Director acted lawfully in suspending the investigation in light of an "ugly and obviously unwelcome threat."⁵⁰

Former U.S. Federal Bureau of Investigation Director Louis Freeh, who serves as legal counsel for Prince Bandar bin Sultan, said in an April 2009 interview that his client did not receive or accept bribes related to the BAE transactions and argued that while the transactions under investigation may appear inconsistent with U.S. standards, each was audited and approved by relevant authorities in the Saudi government.⁵¹

Current Issues in U.S.-Saudi Relations

Saudi-U.S. relations have grown increasingly complex as the number of policy challenges facing both countries has multiplied and as both countries' security and economic interests have become more intertwined. The United States remains the principal external actor in the Middle East region, but by most accounts, many regional policy makers, including those in Saudi Arabia, perceive potential U.S. influence to be limited by current U.S. military commitments in Iraq and Afghanistan. Saudi confidence in U.S. influence and guarantees reportedly has diminished, and the ability of the United States to simultaneously pursue a political and social reform agenda and a close strategic relationship with Saudi Arabia remains in question. Saudi Arabia has weathered economic strains and a dangerous domestic terrorism campaign and arguably has emerged as the most economically and politically powerful Arab state.⁵² Over the long term, growing demand for ⁴⁷ In a personal minute to Attorney General in December 2006, Prime Minister Blair wrote "it is in my judgment very clear that the continuation of the SFO investigation into Al Yamamah risks seriously damaging Saudi confidence in the UK as a partner. It is also my judgment that such damage risks endangering UK national security, both directly in protecting citizens and service people, and indirectly through impeding our search for peace and stability in this critical part of the world."

⁴⁸ SFO Director Robert Wardle has testified that in response to his inquiries about the alleged threats, he was told by the Saudi Ambassador to the United Kingdom that "British lives on British streets were at risk" if the investigation continued.

⁴⁹ High Court of Justice (UK), Approved Judgment, Case No: CO/1567/2007, Neutral Citation Number: [2008] EWHC 714 (Admin), April 10, 2008. Available at <http://media.ft.com/cms/7397bb16-06e8-11dd-b41e-0000779fd2ac.pdf>.

⁵⁰ David Leigh, "Law lords: fraud office right to end bribery investigation: in BAE case," The Guardian, July 31, 2008; and, Lord Bingham, "Extracts: He was confronted by an ugly and unwelcome threat," The Guardian, July 31, 2008.

⁵¹ Extended Interview With Louis Freeh, PBS Frontline, April 7, 2009, available at: [<http://www.pbs.org/frontlineworld/stories/bribe/2009/04/louis-freeh-interview.html>]; and, Tom Hamburger and Josh Meyer, "Freeh defends Saudi payments," Los Angeles Times, April 07, 2009.

⁵² "Saudi Arabia is arguably the most powerful and influential country in the Arab world today." U.S. Department of State, U.S. Strategy Toward Saudi Arabia, Report Pursuant to Section 2043c of the Implementing the Recommendations of the 9/11 Commission Act, P.L. 110-53, January 30, 2008, p. 1.

oil in developing countries, declining oil reserves outside of the Persian Gulf region, and expanding Saudi oil revenues are likely to further raise Saudi Arabia's international profile and influence. U.S. national security interests with regard to Saudi Arabia are likely to persist, while U.S. efforts to achieve policy goals may be complicated by these trends. At present, formal U.S.-Saudi security and political relationships appear strong, in spite of differences in some areas. As noted above, the Obama Administration appears poised to promote U.S.-Saudi cooperation in education, trade, and investment while continuing to seek Saudi cooperation on global counterterrorism and regional security issues.

U.S.-Saudi Military Cooperation⁵³

Long-standing military training programs remain an important pillar of U.S.-Saudi relations. The United States has played an integral role in the development, training, and arming of the Saudi Arabian military since the 1940s, when U.S. military advisors first carried out a comprehensive assessment of the kingdom's defense requirements.⁵⁴ Since the 1940s, a number of subsequent U.S. defense assessments, joint planning activities, and training programs have established close and cooperative relationships between the U.S. military services and their Saudi counterparts. The Saudi Arabian government has continually sought U.S. military technology and training as a guarantee of its national security, and Saudi authorities have pursued military procurement and modernization initiatives based on the recommendations of U.S. defense surveys.⁵⁵ In the late 1970s and early 1980s, the United States Army Corps of Engineers completed a series of massive military infrastructure construction projects across the kingdom; many U.S.-built facilities remain critical to the operations of Saudi security forces.

As noted above, the Iraqi invasion of Kuwait in 1990 and subsequent coalition efforts to evict Iraqi forces and enforce United Nations Security Council Resolutions provided the basis for the expanded U.S. military presence in Saudi Arabia that lasted from 1990 until 2003. Following the overthrow of the Saddam Hussein regime in 2003, the U.S. military withdrew almost all of the 5,000 troops that had been stationed in Saudi Arabia and moved its Combat Air Operations Center from Saudi Arabia to neighboring Qatar. Now, as before, between 200 and 300 U.S. military personnel remain in Saudi Arabia at any given time to administer long-standing U.S. training programs in conjunction with U.S. civilians and local hires. Almost all U.S. training for the Saudi armed forces is funded via Saudi government purchases through the Foreign Military Sales program. The existence of parallel U.S. training programs for different Saudi security forces reflects the relatively stove-piped nature of Saudi Arabia's security and defense establishment; anecdotal evidence suggests that different Saudi ministries and security forces do not operate jointly and may serve as sources of influence and patronage for members of the royal family.⁵⁶

⁵³ A detailed account of the history of U.S.-Saudi military cooperation is contained in David E. Long, The United States and Saudi Arabia: Ambivalent Allies, Westview Press, Boulder and London, 1985, pp.33-72.

⁵⁴ The survey was undertaken by Air Force Major General Richard O'Keefe. See Memorandum of Conversation, 890F.00/12-849, December 8, 1949, Washington, DC, FRUS, 1949, Volume VI, pp. 1625-7.

⁵⁵ Prominent examples include the U.S. air defense survey of the country, which was completed in 1963, and the U.S. naval defense survey associated with the Saudi Naval Expansion Program (SNEP), which was completed in 1969.

⁵⁶ See Joshua Teitelbaum, "A Family Affair: Civil-Military Relations in Saudi Arabia," Draft Paper Presented to the Fourth Mediterranean Social and Political Research Meeting, Robert Schuman Centre for Advanced Studies, Florence, March 2003.

U.S. Military Training Mission in Saudi Arabia (USMTM)

The U.S. Military Training Mission in Saudi Arabia (USMTM) has served as the focal point for U.S.-Saudi military-to-military relations since its establishment in 1953. Through USMTM, the U.S. Department of Defense and the joint military services work with counterparts from the Saudi Ministry of Defense and Aviation (MODA) and Saudi armed forces, which are led by Crown Prince Sultan bin Abd al Aziz and his son Prince Khaled bin Sultan. The USMTM is a joint services training mission under the command of U.S. Central Command (CENTCOM) and works with the Saudi MODA “to assist and advise the Saudi Arabian Armed Forces with respect to the building of military equipment, plans, organization, administrative procedures, training methods, and the conduct of such training.”⁵⁷ Organized in 1953 under the auspices of the U.S.-Saudi Mutual Defense Assistance Agreement,⁵⁸ the program is now administered according to the terms of a 1977 memorandum of understanding.⁵⁹

Saudi Arabian National Guard Modernization Program (PM-SANG)

The Saudi Arabian National Guard (SANG), which operates separately from MODA forces, is led by King Abdullah bin Abd Al Aziz and his son, Prince Miteb bin Abdullah. The United States Army Security Assistance Command (USASAC) administers PM-SANG, which seeks to “develop, within the Saudi Arabian National Guard, the capability to unilaterally initiate, sustain, and operate modern military organizations and systems.” According to USASAC, modernization support under the PM-SANG mission is “open-ended and includes training, supply, maintenance, operations, medical, construction, equipment fielding, equipment post fielding support, and a host of other related activities.”⁶⁰ The program was chartered by and operates according to the terms of a 1973 memorandum of understanding.⁶¹ The Vinnell Corporation, a subsidiary of the Northrop Grumman Corporation, is the primary U.S. contractor charged with training SANG units.⁶² In 2004, terrorists shot and killed an American Vinnell employee based in Riyadh. In July 2008, the Bush Administration notified Congress of a potential sale to Saudi Arabia of “continued assistance in the modernization of the Saudi Arabian National Guard as well as associated equipment and services ... for the period 1 January 2009 through 31 December 2013.” The estimated potential cost is $1.8 billion. The Obama Administration notified Congress in December 2009 of a potential sale of 2,700 TOW-2A anti-tank missiles to the SANG. The potential value of the sale is estimated at $177 million. As of July 2008, there were 215 U.S. military personnel and 500 contractors in Saudi Arabia supporting PM-SANG.

⁵⁷ USMTM Mission Statement, available at <http://www.usmtm.sppn.af.mil/>.

⁵⁸ Agreement Providing for a Military Assistance Advisory Group, June 27, 1953 (4 UST 1482; TIAS 2812; 212 UNTS 335). Terminated February 27, 1977, except that the provisions of paragraph 7 remain in force in respect to activities under the agreement of February 8 and 27, 1977 (28 UST 2409; TIAS 8558).

⁵⁹ Agreement Relating to a United States Military Training Mission in Saudi Arabia, February 27, 1977 (28 UST 2409; TIAS 8558).

⁶⁰ OPM-SANG, “Historical Perspective,” available at <https://www.opmsang.sppn.af.mil/>.

⁶¹ Memorandum of Understanding Concerning the Saudi Arabian National Guard Modernization Program, March 19, 1973 (24 UST 1106; TIAS 7634).

⁶² Information on Vinnell Arabia operations with the SANG is available at <http://www.vinnell.com/ArabiaRecruiting/recruiting.htm>.

Office of Program Management Ministry of Interior – Facilities Security Forces (OPM MOI-FSF)

The newest U.S.-Saudi security cooperation program is administered by the U.S. Department of State and the U.S. military and seeks to improve the state of critical infrastructure (including energy infrastructure) protection in the kingdom. The MOI-FSF program implements the Technical Cooperation Agreement signed by the Bush Administration and the Saudi government in May 2008 to govern U.S. assistance “in the areas of critical infrastructure protection and public security, including border protection, civil defense capabilities, and coast guard and maritime capabilities.”⁶³ A small team of military advisers associated with the MOI-FSF program deployed in early 2009 to begin an assessment mission that will make recommendations to the Ministry of Interior and U.S. Central Command (U.S. CENTCOM) for the development of Saudi Arabia’s planned 35,000-person Facility Security Force. In the future, the OPM MOI-FSF will oversee U.S. contributions to the training and equipping of the FSF, which will be financed on a contract basis. The current commanding officer of U.S. forces engaged with the OPM MOI-FSF program is Brig. Gen. Robert G. Catalanotti. Retired Maj. Gen. Kenneth Bowra is the senior State Department officer for the program. In October 2008, then-U.S. Ambassador to Saudi Arabia Ford Fraker referred to the program as “probably the single biggest initiative for the U.S.-Saudi relationship,” and predicted the value of contracts associated with the program could reach “tens of billions of dollars.”⁶⁴

Counterterrorism

The Bush Administration’s January 2008 Strategy Toward Saudi Arabia asserted that, “Victory for the United States in the global war on terrorism will be impossible without a partnership to dry up funds for terrorists and to combat Islamic extremism in the kingdom.”⁶⁵ Terrorism has long been an issue in U.S.-Saudi relations, and the strategy document constitutes the latest acknowledgment by U.S. officials of the roles that Saudi nationals play in both supporting and combating terrorism. U.S. policy makers sought the support of Saudi authorities throughout the 1970s and 1980s in combating various terrorist groups. However, after terrorist attacks on U.S. military facilities in Saudi Arabia in 1995 and 1996, the need for additional U.S.-Saudi counterterrorism cooperation grew more urgent.

Current counterterrorism issues include joint U.S.-Saudi efforts to eliminate threats posed by violent extremists in the kingdom as well as internationally. U.S. officials acknowledge significant Saudi domestic counterterrorism efforts and encourage the Saudi government to build upon the positive steps it has already taken to combat international terrorism. Both U.S. and Saudi officials have said the impetus for closer counterterrorism cooperation in recent years came from a series of terrorist attacks against Saudi, U.S., and other facilities in Saudi Arabia beginning in May 2003. One knowledgeable observer described the May 2003 attacks as “the inevitable wake up call” for Saudi leaders increasingly concerned over attempts by terrorists to target the Saudi ⁶³ Available at: [<http://www.state.gov/documents/organization/109344.pdf>].

⁶⁴ Saudi-US Relations Information Service, “Managing the Marriage: A Conversation with Ambassador Ford Fraker – Part 3,” December 1, 2008.

⁶⁵ U.S. Department of State, U.S. Strategy Toward Saudi Arabia, Report Pursuant to Section 2043c of the Implementing the Recommendations of the 9/11 Commission Act, P.L. 110-53, January 30, 2008, p. 1.

regime.⁶⁶ According to the 9/11 Commission's final report, "[a]s in Pakistan, Yemen, and other countries, [Saudi] attitudes changed when the terrorism came home."

Al Qaeda in the Arabian Peninsula

Terrorism "came home" to Saudi Arabia gradually during the 1990s, although attacks against non-U.S. targets did not begin until May 2003. Saudi veterans of anti-Soviet fighting in Afghanistan (the "Afghan Arabs"), Saudi combatants from subsequent conflicts involving Muslims in other regions, and Saudi graduates of terrorist training camps based in Afghanistan returned to the kingdom during this period. Some eventually formed the core of an organization calling itself Al Qaeda in the Arabian Peninsula (AQAP), which launched a deadly campaign of terrorist attacks in cooperation with local allies in May 2003.⁶⁷ Saudi counterterrorism officials describe the AQAP terrorism campaign and the government's counterterrorism response as having three stages:⁶⁸

- The "Momentum" Phase—From May 2003 through June 2004, Saudi counterterrorism officials faced an organized campaign of terrorist attacks planned and executed by a trained network of AQAP operatives. Saudi officials describe AQAP as having created a network of storage caches and safe houses based on the work of local and foreign operatives trained in document forgery, fund-raising, publishing, weapons and explosives use, and personal security techniques. Major attacks during this period included the May 2003 bombing of residential compounds in Riyadh and the May 2004 attack on a residential facility in Al Khobar. In June 2004, Saudi officials announced they had shot and killed Abd al Aziz al Muqrin, the then-leader of AQAP.
- The "Regrouping" Phase—From June 2004 through April 2005, Saudi officials report that AQAP operatives began working in smaller cells with new leaders in an attempt to reestablish themselves after the government's initial counterterrorism response. Incidents during this period included a number of attacks on Saudi security facilities and forces, many of which ended in the death or arrest of AQAP fighters. Major attacks during this period included December 2004 attacks on the U.S. Consulate in Jeddah and the Ministry of Interior headquarters in Riyadh. In April 2005, Saudi officials announced the death of AQAP leader Saud al Otaibi following a three-day gun battle in Al Qassim province.
- The "Fragmentation" Phase—From April 2005 to the present, Saudi officials report that the AQAP organization in the kingdom has become increasingly fragmented. According to Saudi counterterrorism officials, current terrorist threats in the kingdom are associated with less organized cells that lack central leadership and that do not exhibit the skills or training evident among AQAP operatives previously detained or killed. Nevertheless, this period has been characterized by high-profile attempted attacks, including an abortive attack in ⁶⁶ Judith Kipper quoted in Patrick E. Tyler, "Stability Itself Is the Enemy," New York Times, November 10, 2003.

⁶⁷ A detailed account of the development and leadership of AQAP is available in Thomas Hegghammer, "Terrorist Recruitment and Radicalization in Saudi Arabia," Middle East Policy, Vol. XIII, No. 4, Winter 2006, pp. 39-60.

⁶⁸ Briefings from Saudi Ministry of Interior counterterrorism advisors, Riyadh, Saudi Arabia, February 2008 and Washington, D.C., April 2008.

February 2006 on the world's largest oil processing facility at Abqaiq in eastern Saudi Arabia. Shootouts and large scale arrests continued through late 2007.

Saudi counterterrorism officials appear confident that they have killed or captured most of the leaders and operatives that made up the original AQAP organization. King Abdullah echoed this sentiment in June 2006, when he stated that AQAP had been "defeated."⁶⁹ Nevertheless, continuing terrorist incidents and arrests have sustained concerns about the threat that Al Qaeda and its sympathizers pose in Saudi Arabia. Of particular concern is an apparent shift in attackers' objectives toward targeting critical energy infrastructure and Saudi government officials.⁷⁰ The arrest of over 110 terrorist suspects in March 2010, along with reports that some of the suspects planned to target energy installations, highlighted these concerns.

In response, Saudi authorities are establishing a 35,000-man oil facilities protection service, with U.S. support. Longer-term challenges include the prospect of better-trained Saudi operatives returning from Iraq (see below) and the prospect of new weapons and operatives entering the kingdom from Yemen, where some terrorist operatives have reestablished AQAP. Saudi authorities also are working to improve border security controls to prevent infiltration of weapons and trained individuals from these areas. According to the U.S. Department of State, "there is an ongoing security threat" in Saudi Arabia, and a travel warning remains in effect.⁷¹

While some analysts have argued that the AQAP campaign threatened the viability of the Al Saud family's control over the country, developments since 2004 have shown that relatively basic improvements in Saudi counterterrorism techniques and investigative procedures enabled the government to weather a sustained assault from trained, experienced Al Qaeda operatives. Others have suggested that if AQAP members had completed preparations for a national campaign the outcome of their sustained confrontation with Saudi authorities may have been more in doubt. Saudi counterterrorism officials, like security officials in other Arab states, report that they do not intend to allow combatants from Iraq and Afghanistan to return and that they plan to maintain a state of vigilance and preparedness based on the expectation of enduring terrorist threats, particularly from Al Qaeda affiliates in Yemen.

Yemen's importance as a hub for Al Qaeda activity appears to have grown during 2009, as indicated by the reorganization of Al Qaeda in the Arabian Peninsula there and the flight of several suspected Saudi Al Qaeda operatives to Yemen. The attempted assassination of Assistant Interior Minister for Security Affairs Prince Mohammed bin Nayef bin Abdelaziz Al Saud in August 2009 highlighted this threat and raised questions about the tactics employed in the kingdom's terrorist rehabilitation program (see below).

Combating Extremism

Saudi officials now consider efforts to combat violent extremist ideology to be a central component in their domestic counterterrorism campaign. Saudi leaders and official religious figures have launched multifaceted public outreach and detainee rehabilitation campaigns that ⁶⁹ "Saudi King Says Al Qaeda Militants Defeated," Reuters, June 7, 2006.

⁷⁰ In late April 2007, Saudi authorities arrested 170 terrorism suspects on charges of planning to target critical oil facilities in the Eastern Province. Dan Murphy, "New Saudi Tack on Al Qaeda," Christian Science Monitor, April 30, 2007.

⁷¹ U.S. Department of State Bureau of Consular Affairs, Travel Warning - Saudi Arabia, February 18, 2010.

seek to portray Al Qaeda supporters and other violent activists as “misguided” followers of a “deviant ideology.” These characterizations have powerful negative connotations in Saudi society, and are closely associated with long-standing government efforts to promote social consensus and deference to the official views of religious and political authorities. Newspapers and television channels regularly feature articles and programs condemning “deviant ideology” and promoting Saudi government programs designed to root out violent extremism.

The Saudi Ministries of Islamic Affairs, Education, and Interior have launched various programs associated with the campaigns, as have religious bodies such as the Commission for the Promotion of Virtue and the Prevention of Vice.⁷² The detainee rehabilitation program is based on the engagement of Saudi counterterrorism officials, psychologists, and religious clerics with terrorism detainees in an effort to dissuade detainees from supporting extremism and violence in the future.⁷³ Successfully rehabilitated detainees are provided various types of social and financial support designed to prevent recidivism.⁷⁴ Saudi authorities report that recidivism rate estimates range from 10%-20%.⁷⁵

Some outside observers have hailed the Saudi programs as innovative and effective, while others have questioned the wisdom of releasing and supporting former detainees because of the tangible threats that potential recidivism could pose. Saudi authorities state that they carefully monitor participants during and after rehabilitation, and trials and continued detention await unresponsive detainees. The extent and success of the program and Saudi Arabia’s post-rehabilitation monitoring drew new skepticism in early 2009 when two individuals who had passed through the program and had disappeared resurfaced in Yemen and announced themselves to be the leaders of Al Qaeda operations in that country and in the broader Arabian Peninsula. Subsequent reporting revealed that other program participants could not be located and are believed to have resumed activities in support of Al Qaeda. The attempted assassination of the program’s primary patron and sponsor, Prince Mohammed bin Nayef, by a Saudi national posing as a repentant terrorist raised further doubts about the program’s success in dealing with hardened militants. Reporting in the aftermath of the attack also revealed a high degree of personal involvement on the part of the prince in negotiation with the would-be assassin for his surrender, undermining some international media accounts of the program that suggested the program was managed by counterterrorism officers with a strictly clinical approach.⁷⁶

The ideological content of reeducation programs and Saudi anti-terrorism outreach statements also may be problematic to the extent that it portrays religiously motivated violence as illegitimate when it is expressly prohibited by religious and political leaders, rather than as being illegitimate in and of itself. Similar questions could be raised regarding the Saudi anti-extremism campaign’s approach to so-called takfiri ideology; this term refers to a practice known as takfir in which an individual is ruled insufficiently pious and therefore subject to religious disavowal and

⁷² OSC Document FEA20070717232153, “Saudi Arabia: Riyadh Announces New Campaigns To Confront Extremist Ideology,” July 17, 2007; and, OSC Document GMP20080429614004, “Saudi Vice, Virtue Chief on Study Documenting Counter-Terrorism Efforts,” Ukaz (Jeddah), April 24, 2008.

⁷³ See Terrence Henry, “Get out of Jihad Free,” The Atlantic, June 2007, pp 39-40.

⁷⁴ See for example, OSC Document GMP20071008836001, “Saudi Minister Orders Funds, Temporary Release For Returnees From Guantanamo,” Ukaz (Jeddah), October 6, 2007.

⁷⁵ Briefings from Saudi Ministry of Interior counterterrorism advisors, Riyadh, Saudi Arabia, February 2008.

⁷⁶ See for example, a partial transcript of call between the attacker and Prince Mohammed bin Nayef reprinted by the Saudi Press Agency on September 2, 2009, available at: <http://www.saudigazette.com.sa/index.cfm?method=home.regcon&contentID=2009090248580>.

potential violence. Some official clerics continue to argue that determinations of religious fidelity and infidelity are not divisive or illegitimate in and of themselves, but rather that judgments regarding individuals' piety should be made by qualified religious scholars.⁷⁷

Some opposition figures have questioned the legitimacy of Saudi officials who call on Saudi citizens to avoid supporting combatants in Iraq or other conflicts involving Muslims. Some critics allege that Saudi officials and clerics are being hypocritical in light of their past encouragement of similar activism among Saudis in other cases.⁷⁸ At issue is the government's assertion that activism or violence are illegitimate unless endorsed by the country's leaders. Some critics' counter-arguments contend that the government's endorsements appear to have become arbitrary or based on secular foreign policy priorities rather than on religious principles or solidarity.

The Arab-Israeli Conflict

Many Saudi citizens and officials hold and express the view that the Israeli-Palestinian conflict is the central policy problem in the Middle East region. Many Saudis argue that the United States should support a solution to the conflict that adequately addresses various Palestinian and Arab concerns. The government of Saudi Arabia supports Palestinian national aspirations, strongly endorses Muslim claims in the Old City of Jerusalem, and has frequently criticized Israeli settlement building in the West Bank and Gaza Strip. Since the 1940s, Saudi-U.S. relations have been challenged repeatedly by stark differences of opinion over the Israeli-Palestinian question, with leaders on both sides questioning the other's devotion to achieving a just peace and willingness to abide by stated policy commitments.

Unlike several other Gulf countries, Saudi Arabia has not established open trade or liaison channels for communication with Israel. Nevertheless, Saudi Arabia generally has supported U.S. policy since the early 1990s by endorsing Israeli-Palestinian peace agreements; by joining with neighboring Gulf states in 1994 in terminating enforcement of the so-called secondary and tertiary (indirect) boycotts of Israel;⁷⁹ and by adopting a more proactive approach to Arab-Israeli peacemaking and diplomacy. The outbreak of the second Palestinian intifadah, or uprising, in late 2000 and the collapse of the Oslo peace process in early 2001 ushered in a period of renewed tension in Saudi-Israeli relations. Saudi leaders were sharply critical of Israeli military and security responses to Palestinian terrorist attacks and launched massive relief campaigns for the Palestinians, some of which are alleged to have supported the families of Palestinians who died in attacks on Israelis or in engagements with Israeli security forces.

In response to Israel's 2009 military campaign against Hamas in the Gaza Strip, Saudi leaders sought to balance their commitment to conditional offers of peace and recognition to Israel with the demands of regional rivals and some Saudi citizens, clerics, and officials for a more confrontational approach to Israel. Uneven progress in U.S.-sponsored peace efforts and Israeli settlement construction appear to be testing Saudi leaders' patience. Statements from Saudi officials in 2010 indicate the kingdom's continuing support for U.S. involvement in the peace process; for comprehensive, direct negotiations between Israel and the Palestinians on all aspects of the conflict, and for an area free of weapons of mass destruction, including nuclear weapons, in the Middle East.

⁷⁷ For example, Saudi Grand Mufti Shaykh Abd al Aziz bin Abdullah Al Al Shaykh has argued that, "The issues of holding others as infidels or debauchers or apostates are sharia [Islamic law] issues that should be built on the scholarship of sharia and by qualified religious scholars." OSC Document GMP20080318913003, "Saudi Grand Mufti Lashes Out at Terrorists, Deviants in Lecture at Islamic University," Al Madinah (Jeddah), March 18, 2008.

⁷⁸ A prominent early example of this type of encouragement was King Khalid's decision in 1980 to create a Committee to Aid the Afghani Mujahidin, which followed an earlier announcement by then-Grand Mufti Shaykh Abd al Aziz Bin Baz that authorized the payment of zakat, a 2.5% alms wealth tax required of Muslims as one of the five pillars of faith, to anti-Soviet fighters in Afghanistan. See Saudi Committee to Collect Funds for Afghan Muslims, U.S. Department of State, Cable Jidda 00530, January 1980. Similar committees were subsequently established over the next twenty years to provide "support" or "relief" to Bosnians, Palestinians, Chechens, Kashmiris, Kosovars, and Iraqis.

⁷⁹ Saudi Arabia maintains the primary (direct) boycott. See below.

Saudi-Palestinian Relations

Saudi Arabia maintains contact with the two main Palestinian political entities—the secular nationalist Fatah movement and the Islamic Resistance Movement, more commonly known as Hamas, which remains a U.S.-designated foreign terrorist organization. Political rivalry and violence between Hamas and Fatah since 2006 has complicated Saudi policy toward the Palestinians. As a result, the Saudi government at times has pursued policies divergent from the expressed preferences of the United States and other members of the Quartet.⁸⁰ However, more recent Saudi policy initiatives have sought to promote reconciliation between Hamas and Fatah and foster inter-Arab unity, in light of internecine fighting and a political stalemate that has blocked further progress in the Palestinian-Israeli peace process.

Saudi authorities and citizens have long endorsed public and private efforts to channel financial and material support to Palestinian organizations and causes. These efforts continued during the period in which Hamas controlled the Palestinian Authority.⁸¹ In December 2007, Saudi Arabia pledged between $500 and $750 million to the Palestinian Authority over three years, and unofficial estimates suggest that Saudi pledges scheduled for delivery in 2008 have been met.⁸² In January 2009, the Saudi Arabian government launched a nationwide fundraising campaign under the auspices of the Saudi Committee to Support the Palestinian People in response to Israel's military operations in the Gaza Strip. In August 2009, Saudi Arabia transferred $200 million to the Palestinian Authority in line with its pledges of assistance.

Saudi Peace Proposals

In March 2002, then-Crown Prince Abdullah bin Abd al Aziz proposed a peace initiative calling for full Israeli withdrawal from occupied territories in return for full normalization of relations between Arab states and Israel. The 2002 initiative paralleled and built upon the August 1981

⁸⁰ The Quartet includes the United States, the United Nations, Russia, and the European Union. For example, in 2006, Saudi Arabia continued to deliver assistance to the Palestinian territories, in spite of U.S. efforts to convince the international community to halt support for the Palestinian Authority following Hamas' victory in parliamentary elections. Similarly, in February 2007, King Abdullah invited representatives of Fatah and Hamas to meet in Mecca, where they negotiated an agreement on a national unity government. Although the agreement represented an achievement for Saudi diplomacy, the national unity government did not explicitly meet preconditions set by the United States and its Quartet partners for recognition of the then-Hamas-led government (i.e., disavowal of violence, recognition of Israel, and acceptance of previous Israeli-Palestinian accords). Helene Cooper, "After the Mecca Accord, Clouded Horizons," New York Times, February 21, 2007.

⁸¹ In late July 2006, the Saudi Arabian government announced plans to transfer $250 million in reconstruction assistance "to the Palestinian people" and confirmed the transfer of half of a $92 million budgetary support pledge for the Palestinian Authority.

⁸² Howard LaFranchi, "Global donors exceed Palestinian expectations at Paris conference," Christian Science Monitor, December 19, 2007.

eight point plan proposed by then-Crown Prince Fahd bin Abd al Aziz and subsequently endorsed by the Arab League. The text of both proposals can be found in Appendix B. Continuing violence and political developments precluded further consideration of the 2002 Saudi proposal for several years. The overall direction of Saudi policy has remained committed to engagement in support of an eventual negotiated settlement. On March 28-29, 2007, the heads of state of most of the Arab League countries met in Riyadh and reconfirmed their support for King Abdullah's peace proposal, as adopted by the Arab League in 2002. At the time, Saudi Foreign Minister Prince Saud al Faisal warned that if Israel rejects the proposal, "they will be putting their future not in the hands of the peacemakers but in the hands of the lords of war."⁸³

In November 2007, Saudi Foreign Minister Prince Saud al Faisal attended the U.S.-sponsored peace meeting in Annapolis, MD, lending the kingdom's support to renewed U.S. efforts to broker a two-state solution to the Israeli-Palestinian conflict. The foreign minister reiterated Saudi Arabia's willingness to normalize relations with Israel subject to conditions, including the establishment of a Palestinian state on territory occupied by Israel in 1967, a negotiated solution for the return of Palestinian refugees, and some degree of Palestinian sovereignty over East Jerusalem.

During the last year of the Bush Administration, Saudi officials expressed increasing frustration with U.S. policy and Israeli efforts to restrict the flow of material into the Hamas-controlled Gaza Strip. In February 2008, Prince Saud al Faisal stated that, "We hope that Israel responds positively to our quest and efforts, to avoid desperation that would force us to review our options."⁸⁴ In May 2008, he expressed the Saudi government's "dissatisfaction with and strong condemnation of Israel's continuation of its collective punishment policy against the Palestinian people, and its continuing blockade of the Gaza Strip."⁸⁵

Israel's strikes on Hamas in January 2009 drew widespread condemnation in Saudi Arabia, although the government took a position that linked the outbreak of hostilities to intransigence and attacks by Hamas. At a January summit in Kuwait, King Abdullah characterized the Gaza conflict as "bloody, painful and brutal scenes and genocide being carried out by a criminal, inhuman, and merciless gang as the world listened and watched," and warned Israel that "the Arab Initiative on the table today will not be on the table for ever."⁸⁶

U.S. Special Envoy for Middle East Peace Senator George Mitchell has visited Saudi Arabia repeatedly along with other high ranking U.S. officials. Saudi officials continue to call for Palestinian unity and forceful engagement by the United States in supporting a balanced approach to the conflict and in restraining potential Israeli military operations against Hamas and other regional threats.

Foreign Minister Prince Saud Al Faisal Al Saud visited the United States in September 2009 to represent the kingdom at the opening of the United Nations General Assembly and the G-20 meeting in Pittsburgh, PA. In his remarks at the General Assembly, he reiterated the kingdom's

⁸³ David Blair, "Accept Peace Plan or Face War, Israel Told," Daily Telegraph (UK), March 28, 2007.

⁸⁴ Damian Wroclavsky and Fiona Ortiz, "Saudi minister calls for Israeli response on talks," Reuters, February 20, 2008.

⁸⁵ OSC Document GMP20080514831001, "Re-filed Version of SPA Report on Saudi ForMin Al Faysal's News Conference," Saudi Press Agency, May 13, 2008.

⁸⁶ OSC Document GMP20090119869001, "Saudi King: Israel 'Must Realize' Arab Peace Offer 'Will Not Be on Table Forever'," January 19, 2009.

position with regard to the Israeli-Palestinian conflict, emphasizing that the kingdom would not adopt any so-called “confidence building measures” toward Israel beyond the standing Saudi peace proposal that has been endorsed by the Arab League. The Foreign Minister said, “the desired peace will never be achieved by attempting to impose normalization of relations on the Arabs before the completion of withdrawal and the establishment of peace, as though we are expected to reward the aggressor for his aggression in a reverse logic that totally lacks any form of serious credibility.”⁸⁷

Prince Saud Al Faisal’s remarks echoed the positions taken by Saudi Ambassador to the United States Adel Al Jubeir in a September 8, 2009, letter to Members of Congress, in which he stated the kingdom’s “firm view that resolution of this conflict does require outlining the final settlement at the outset, followed by prompt resumption of negotiations on all final status issues—borders, Jerusalem, water, security and refugees—with a deadline set for their early conclusion. The focus must be on the final settlement and on the final peace, not on an incremental process.”⁸⁸

Iraq

Saudi Arabia’s relationship with Iraq has been tense historically, although periods of Saudi-Iraqi cooperation have occurred when supported by convergent interests, most notably during the Iran-Iraq war of the 1980s. Saudi Arabia publicly opposed the U.S.-led invasion of Iraq in 2003, but provided logistical support to U.S. forces,⁸⁹ and Saudi officials have called on U.S. forces not to leave Iraq on an “uninvited” basis.⁹⁰ Saudi Arabia’s principal interests with regard to Iraq are—first, to prevent instability and conflict in Iraq from threatening Saudi Arabia’s internal security and stability; second, to prevent the repression of Iraq’s Sunnis by newly dominant Shiites; and, third, to limit the regional influence of a potentially hostile Iran.⁹¹

Saudi Arabia’s longer term interests include ensuring that the revival of Iraq’s oil industry does not threaten Saudi preeminence and preferences in global energy markets and that Iraq does not ⁸⁷ United Nations General Assembly, Debate of the 64th Session (2009), Saudi Arabia – Statement of His Royal Highness Prince Saud Al-Faisal, Minister for Foreign Affairs, September 26, 2009. Available at: <http://www.un.org/ga/64/generaldebate/SA.shtml>.

⁸⁸ Letter available from the Embassy of Saudi Arabia, Washington, DC, at: <http://www.saudiembassy.net/announcement/announcement09130901.aspx>.

⁸⁹ On March 19, 2003, a communiqué from then-King Fahd stated that Saudi Arabia “will not participate in any way” in the coalition attack on Iraq. A number of news reports, however, indicated that Saudi Arabia informally agreed to provide logistical support to U.S.-led forces, including permission to conduct refueling, reconnaissance, surveillance, and transport missions from bases in Saudi Arabia; landing and overflight clearances; and use of a U.S.-built facility in Saudi Arabia known as the Combat Air Operations Center (CAOC) to coordinate military operations in the region. Unnamed Saudi and U.S. officials later told the press that the Saudi royal family permitted the staging of U.S. special forces operations from inside Saudi Arabia, allowed some 250-300 mainly transport and surveillance planes to fly missions from Saudi Arabia, and provided tens of millions of dollars in discounted oil, gas, and fuel for U.S. forces. See also “U.S. And Saudis Agree On Cooperation,” Washington Post, February 26, 2003; and John Solomon, “Saudis had wider role in war,” Associated Press, April 26, 2004.

⁹⁰ In October 2006, and repeatedly thereafter, then-Saudi Ambassador to the United States Prince Turki al Faisal argued that, “The kingdom’s position has always been that since the United States came into Iraq uninvited, they shouldn’t leave uninvited.” Arshad Mohammed, “Saudi envoy warns US against abrupt Iraq withdrawal,” Reuters, October 30, 2006.

⁹¹ For the Saudi cabinet’s statement of its key principles for Iraq, see Saudi Press Agency (Riyadh), “King Abdullah Chairs Cabinet’s Session,” November 20, 2006.

re-emerge as a strategic military threat to the Arab Gulf states. Reconciliation and long-term stability in Iraq could ease Saudi fears of creeping insecurity, but could also create new challenges. Saudi Arabia's immediate concern is the reintegration or elimination of Saudi militants who may be seeking to return from Iraq. The success of Iraqi reconciliation efforts and the choices made by Iraq's government will determine whether Saudi fears about the empowerment of Shiite Arabs and the growth of Iranian influence persist or diminish. Future Iraqi choices in key areas such as energy and military policy will have important implications for Iraqi-Saudi relations.⁹²

Saudi Policy Priorities in Iraq

The Saudi Arabian government has refrained from overt political-military intervention in Iraq since 2003, in spite of the threat that instability in Iraq has posed to Saudi Arabia's national security. To date, Saudi policy initiatives have sought to meet the humanitarian needs of Iraqis displaced by violence; to promote political and religious reconciliation among Iraqis by hosting and participating in various regional conferences; and, to take preventive security measures to limit the spread of violence into Saudi Arabia. Some analysts believe that Saudi Arabia has not fulfilled pledges of aid to Iraq because it has not wanted to support an Iraqi government that many Saudis believed had a Shiite sectarian agenda. Other observers also speculate that the Saudi government may be offering financial support to Sunni Arab individuals and groups in Iraq, including tribal leaders and others associated with the so called "awakening" movement and the Iraqiya coalition led by former Prime Minister Iyad Allawi. However, Prince Saud al Faisal publicly has dismissed calls for direct Saudi involvement in supporting Iraqi Sunnis and has stated, that "since the start of the crisis in Iraq ... the Kingdom has said it will stand at an equal distance from all Iraqi groups and does not describe itself as the guardian of any group or sect."⁹³

Saudi-Iraqi Diplomatic and Economic Relations

Sectarian and strategic anxieties complicate Saudi efforts to engage the Shiite-led Iraqi government, to establish strong trade links, and to discourage and prevent Saudi clerics and individuals from supporting Sunni Arab combatants in Iraq. Saudi leaders maintain regular contact with prominent Iraqi government officials, clerics, and political figures. A Saudi Foreign Ministry delegation visited Iraq in August 2007 to explore the possibility of reopening an embassy in Baghdad, and in January 2008, Saudi Foreign Minister Prince Saud al Faisal announced that an ambassador had been chosen and that Saudi Arabia hoped to open an embassy in Baghdad "in the next few months."⁹⁴ However, in October 2008 he appeared to place an indefinite delay on plans to send an ambassador to Baghdad because, in the Saudi government's view, security concerns would limit the ability of any Saudi representative to operate effectively.⁹⁵

⁹² With regard to oil policy, there is a possibility, in the words of one analyst, that, over the long term, "the Saudi interest in moderate prices and preserving market share will run afoul of the Iraqi need for maximum production at high prices to fund national reconstruction." See Joseph McMillan, Saudi Arabia and Iraq: Oil, Religion, and an Enduring Rivalry, USIP, Special Report No. 157, January 2006, p. 14.

⁹³ Arab News (Jeddah), "Kingdom Won't Take Sides in Iraq, Says Saud," December 20, 2006; and Robin Wright, "Royal Intrigue, Unpaid Bills Preceded Saudi Ambassador's Exit," Washington Post, December 23, 2006.

⁹⁴ Prince Saud al Faisal quoted in "U.S. Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice Remarks With Saudi Arabia Minister of Foreign Affairs, His Royal Highness Prince Saud Al-Faisal," State Department Press Releases and Documents, January 15, 2008.

⁹⁵ Donna Abu-Nasr, "Saudi Arabia, citing security, delays opening embassy in Baghdad," Associated Press, October (continued...)

A regional press report in April 2009 appeared to confirm that advanced preparations for an eventual Saudi diplomatic presence in Baghdad have been made, but quoted Saudi officials as indicating that security concerns continue to limit their willingness to send high level diplomatic personnel to Iraq on a permanent basis. The bombings of Iraqi government ministries in August and October 2009 likely confirmed Saudi views of insecurity in Baghdad following the withdrawal of U.S. forces from Iraq's cities. As of May 2010, a Saudi Embassy had not been opened in Baghdad and no ambassador had been publicly identified.

As of January 2004, Iraq reportedly owed the Saudi government $9 billion in debts incurred during the Saddam Hussein regime (mostly during the Iran-Iraq war of the 1980s), while private Saudi firms and banks hold about $19 billion in Iraqi debt.⁹⁶ Questions have been raised about whether Iraq's debt to Saudi Arabia is subject to interest, and both parties have agreed to discuss the matter. U.S. officials have encouraged Saudi Arabia and Kuwait to forgive Iraq's outstanding debt to support reconstruction and economic recovery efforts. The Iraq Study Group report speculated that Saudi Arabia could agree to cancel the outstanding debt as part of regional efforts to support and stabilize Iraq.⁹⁷ In May 2007, Prince Saud al Faisal stated that the Saudi government will continue its negotiations with Iraq "to have an appropriate solution to debts in line with rules of the Paris Club."

In December 2008, Paris Club members completed their debt forgiveness schedule with Iraq, which eliminated 80% of Iraq's Paris Club-held debt in line with Iraq's participation in an IMF economic reform program. In April 2009, press reports indicated that Saudi Arabia may be reconsidering the terms of publicly held Iraqi debt from the Iran-Iraq war period while continuing to consider privately held debt as unalterable. Past media reports have suggested that Saudi officials are reluctant to offer substantial economic concessions, such as debt relief, until they are confident that Iraq's elected government is committed to establishing an equitable balance of power among Iraq's sectarian groups and to resisting Iranian influence.

The Saudi government has pledged $500 million from the Saudi Development Fund to sponsor Iraqi government-requested development projects, along with $500 million to finance potential bilateral trade and close to $90 million in humanitarian relief assistance.⁹⁸ However, since 2003, trade between Iraq and Saudi Arabia has remained very limited. Saudi and Iraqi security services also reportedly have increased their cooperation. Nevertheless, some accounts suggest that Iraqis are frustrated by the slow pace of official Saudi-Iraqi rapprochement and the Saudi government's unwillingness or inability to prevent individuals in Saudi Arabia from engaging in sectarian incitement. In September 2009, Iraqi Foreign Minister Hoshyar Zebari said in a media interview that, "To be frank and clear, I will say there is really a problem in Iraqi-Saudi relations. We are doing the impossible to correct these relations and place them on the right track."⁹⁹

(...continued)

21, 2008.

⁹⁶ For more information, see CRS Report RL33376, Iraq's Debt Relief: Procedure and Potential Implications for International Debt Relief, by Martin A. Weiss; and, Tom Everett-Heath, "Opposing Views of the Kingdom to Come," Middle East Economic Digest, January 23-29, 2004, p. 1.

⁹⁷ Mariam Karouny and Alister Bull, "Iraq Finance Minister Says Still No Deal on Gulf Debt, Reuters, August 1, 2006; and, ISG Report, p. 35.

⁹⁸ Statement of Foreign Minister Prince Saud al Faisal to United Nations meeting on Iraq, September 18, 2006. Available at <http://www.mofa.gov.sa/Detail.asp?InNewsItemID=55259>.

⁹⁹ OSC Report GMP20090918643001, "Al-Jazirah Interviews Iraq's Zebari on Syrian-Iraqi Crisis, Ties With (continued...)

Economic Relations and Trade

U.S.-Saudi Trade

Saudi Arabia remained the largest U.S. trading partner in the Middle East in 2009. According to the U.S. International Trade Administration, Saudi exports to the United States were $22.0 billion (down from $54.8 billion in 2008 and $35.6 billion in 2007) and imports from the United States are estimated at $10.8 billion (down from $12.5 billion in 2008 and $10.4 billion in 2007).¹⁰⁰ Comparable 2009 figures for Israel, the second-largest U.S. trading partner in the Middle East that year, were $18.7 billion in exports to the United States and $9.6 billion in imports from the United States. To a considerable extent, the high value of U.S.-Saudi trade is dictated by U.S. imports of hydrocarbons from Saudi Arabia (see Table 3 below) and U.S. exports of weapons, machinery, and vehicles to Saudi Arabia. Fluctuations in the volume and value of U.S.-Saudi oil trade account for declines in the value of Saudi exports to the U.S. in recent years.

U.S. Oil Imports and Saudi Policy

With the world's largest proven oil reserves (estimated at 262.3 billion barrels), Saudi Arabia produced approximately 8 million barrels per day (bpd) of crude oil in mid-January 2009, a significant drop from record high production of 9.7 million bpd in mid-2008.¹⁰¹ Recent estimates suggest production remains at or near these levels. Saudi oil reserves, oil exports, and excess oil production capacity make the kingdom the focal point for the global oil market. SaudiAramco is in the process of completing a multi-year, multi-billion dollar production capacity expansion project that will raise its daily production capacity to 12.5 million bpd. According to the U.S. Energy Information Administration, in 2009, Saudi Arabia was the fourth-largest supplier to the United States, based on average monthly supply. (See Table 3 below.)

U.S. calls for Saudi Arabia to increase its daily oil production in order to bring down climbing global oil prices in early 2008 were met with resistance from Saudi oil officials. Saudi officials argued that global consumption data and oil market conditions suggested that high oil prices were not the result of a lack of supply or excess demand, but rather a function of refining capacity restrictions, declines in the value of the U.S. dollar relative to other currencies, commodity market speculation, and insecurity in key oil producing regions. Significant declines in global demand and market prices for crude oil since mid-2008 have largely reversed a trend that delivered record oil export revenues and budget surpluses to Saudi Arabia over the last five years. Most estimates suggest that oil export revenue provides 90% of the Saudi government's budget. In response Saudi Arabia led OPEC production cuts in an attempt to stabilize oil prices. Saudi authorities estimated a 2009 budget deficit of $17 billion after a record surplus of $157 billion in 2008. In September 2009, Saudi Oil Minister Ali al Naimi said in an interview that, "We believe that around $75 [per barrel] is a fair price for the oil producer, the consumer."¹⁰²

(...continued)

Neighbors," September 18, 2009.

¹⁰⁰ U.S. Department of Commerce, International Trade Administration Office of Trade and Industry Information (OTII), National Trade Data, Custom Report - Saudi Arabia, May 2010. Available at <http://tse.export.gov/>.

¹⁰¹ U.S. Energy Information Administration, Saudi Arabia: Energy Profile, April 21, 2008; and, Economist Intelligence Unit, Country Report: Saudi Arabia, January 19, 2009.

¹⁰² Kate Dourian, "Saudi minister Naimi sees no need for OPEC production change at December meeting," Platts (continued...)

Table 3. U.S. Oil Consumption and Imports
(in millions of barrels per day)

Category	2003	2004	2005	2006	2007	2008	2009 Average
Total U.S. Consumption	20.034	20.731	20.802	20.687	20.698	19.419	18.879
Total U.S. Imports	12.264	13.145	13.714	13.612	13.439	12.872	11.891
Imports from Saudi Arabia	1.774	1.558	1.537	1.463	1.489	1.532	1.012
Imports from Canada	2.072	2.138	2.181	2.353	2.426	2.459	2.464
Imports from Mexico	1.623	1.665	1.662	1.705	1.533	1.299	1.235
Imports from Venezuela	1.376	1.554	1.529	1.419	1.362	1.191	1.078

Source: U.S. Department of Energy, Annual Energy Review (AER) 2008, Report No. DOE/EIA-0384(2008), June 26, 2009; Weekly U.S. Petroleum Products Product Supplied; Weekly Imports and Exports, and, AER Table 5.4 - Petroleum Imports by Country of Origin, 1960-2008, available at <http://www.eia.doe.gov/aer/>.

Saudi officials have committed to completing planned oil production capacity expansion to the level of 12.5 million barrels per day, while arguing that U.S. policy makers and elected officials are sending conflicting signals about the future of U.S. energy policy. Specifically, Saudi officials appear concerned that U.S. efforts to reduce petroleum consumption in the United States will undermine demand for Saudi and other petroleum producers' exports, which in turn could limit the profitability of planned investments in production capacity and threaten the fiscal positions of oil revenue dependent governments. Saudi officials also are warning that increased domestic energy consumption could significantly reduce the amount of oil available for export if changes to pricing and consumption patterns are not made. An Aramco official reportedly said in April 2010 that domestic oil consumption could grow from the equivalent of 3.4 mbd in 2009 to the equivalent of 8.3 mbd by 2028 if changes are not made.¹⁰³

U.S.-Saudi Foreign Direct Investment

Saudi leaders, notably King Abdullah, have shown increasing interest in attracting foreign investment to the kingdom. Major Saudi economic initiatives, such as plans to construct several massive economic cities¹⁰⁴ and to lift Saudi Arabia's global competitiveness ranking into the top 10 by 2010 (the "10x10" initiative),¹⁰⁵ involve efforts to secure foreign investment and economic

(...continued)

Oilgram News, September 29, 2009.

¹⁰³ SaudiAramco CEO Chief Executive Khaled al Falih as cited in Alex Schindelar, "Aramco: Rising Consumption at Home Could Cut into Saudi Exports," Oil Daily, April 27, 2010.

¹⁰⁴ For more information see the Saudi Arabian General Investment Authority (SAGIA) overview, available at <http://www.sagia.gov.sa/english/index.php?page=ecs-overview>.

¹⁰⁵ For more information, see the SAGIA overview, available at <http://www.sagia.gov.sa/english/index.php?page=overview-of-10x10-program>.

development partnerships. Economists expect that tighter credit conditions and reduced global economic activity may hinder Saudi efforts to attract outside investors, although Saudi officials appear to be prepared to continue with several ambitious economic reform and infrastructure expansion initiatives.

Several U.S. companies are involved in existing or planned projects in Saudi Arabia, many of which leverage Saudi energy resources. On May 12, 2007, SaudiAramco and the U.S. Dow Chemical Company announced the signing of a memorandum of understanding related to the development of a large scale, jointly operated petrochemical and plastic production facility in Saudi Arabia's Eastern Province. The potential value of the deal has been estimated at over $20 billion, although bidding for engineering and construction contracts has been delayed until 2010.¹⁰⁶ On May 21, 2008, General Electric announced the sale of its GE Plastics division to the Saudi Basic Industries Corporation (SABIC) for $11.6 billion. The Saudi Arabian government owns 70% of SABIC.

Saudi officials and business leaders have at times expressed concern that U.S. companies are failing to adequately pursue non-energy resource linked investment opportunities in the kingdom. Saudi Arabia established a sovereign wealth fund in May 2008 with limited resources (~$5 billion) for overseas investments. Other sovereign wealth funds have attracted interest in the United States, where some observers and policy makers have been advocating for increased transparency of and rules for sovereign wealth fund investments.¹⁰⁷

Saudi Boycott of Israel and WTO Membership¹⁰⁸

Some Members of Congress have raised questions regarding Saudi Arabia's participation in the primary Arab League boycott of Israel in light of the conclusion of a bilateral agreement with the United States on Saudi Arabia's WTO accession.¹⁰⁹ On April 5, 2006, the House passed H.Con.Res. 370, which expresses the sense of Congress that Saudi Arabia should fully live up to its WTO commitments and end all aspects of any boycott on Israel. Under the terms of an agreement with the United States, Saudi negotiators confirmed that Saudi Arabia would not invoke the non-application provision of the WTO Agreement toward any fellow WTO member (which would prohibit enforcement of the boycott) and confirmed the kingdom would not enforce the secondary and tertiary Arab League boycotts.

However, in June 2006, then-Saudi Ambassador to the United States Prince Turki al Faisal reportedly stated that the Government of Saudi Arabia plans to continue to enforce the Arab ¹⁰⁶ Sharad Mirji, "Dow/Saudi Aramco delay bids for $25 bil Ras Tanura plant: sources," Platts Commodity News, February 5, 2009.

¹⁰⁷ See Economist Intelligence Unit, "Join the club: Saudi Arabia launches a formal sovereign-wealth fund," May 1, 2008. For background information on sovereign wealth funds and related U.S. policy debates, see CRS Report RL34336, Sovereign Wealth Funds: Background and Policy Issues for Congress, by Martin A. Weiss.

¹⁰⁸ See CRS Report RL33961, Arab League Boycott of Israel, by Martin A. Weiss.

¹⁰⁹ For more background, see American Association of Exporters and Importers, "Saudi Arabia's WTO Accession," Vol. 105, No. 46, November 22, 2005. On September 9, 2005, the U.S. Trade Representative (USTR) announced that the United States and Saudi Arabia had completed bilateral negotiations on terms of Saudi accession to the World Trade Organization (WTO). On November 10, President Bush signed a memorandum to the USTR noting that Saudi Arabia had concluded a bilateral agreement with the United States related to Saudi accession to the WTO. In the meantime, the press noted that Saudi Arabia had concluded bilateral negotiations with all other interested WTO members, and on December 11, 2005, Saudi Arabia became the 149th member of the WTO.

League's primary boycott of Israel, drawing criticism and inquiries from some Members of Congress. Prince Turki reportedly commented that "the primary boycott is an issue of national sovereignty guaranteed within the makeup of the WTO and its rules," and indicated that the Saudi government had already made its decision clear to the United States Trade Representative's office (USTR). A USTR spokesman was quoted as saying that "in [USTR's] view, maintaining the primary boycott of Israel is not consistent with Saudi Arabia's obligation to extend full WTO treatment to all WTO Members."¹¹⁰ January 2007 press reports quoted the Director General of the Saudi Customs Service, Saleh Al Barak, as saying that goods manufactured in Israel could not be legally imported into Saudi Arabia.¹¹¹ However, Dan Catarivas, director of foreign trade and international relations at the Manufacturers Association of Israel, stated his opinion in a March 2008 interview that "the Arab boycott exists much more on paper than in practicality," and media reporting suggests that low levels of Saudi-Israeli trade do exist and may grow if political conditions permit.¹¹² As of April 2010, the U.S. Department of the Treasury included Saudi Arabia on the list of countries that require or may require participation in or cooperation with an international boycott as define in Section 999(b)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986.¹¹³

Human Rights, Religious Freedom, and Political Reform

U.S. efforts to encourage the protection of human rights, the establishment of religious freedom, and the liberalization of political life in Saudi Arabia continue, but face some significant obstacles. To outsiders, Saudi decision-making processes remain opaque. Many experts agree that the leaders of the Saudi monarchy seek to preserve their ultimate authority over political decision making in the kingdom. Saudi leaders maintain their legitimacy among conservative constituent groups by carefully managing changes that could affect established religious and cultural practices. Recent experience suggests that U.S. reliance on Saudi government cooperation for counterterrorism, regional security, and global energy supply purposes may limit the U.S. government's ability to press for more rapid or wide-ranging changes in Saudi domestic and social policies.

As it has elsewhere across the Arab world, advocacy by the U.S. government and other international parties in support of social and political reform in the kingdom has been met with skepticism and allegations of outside interference. At the same time, some reform activists question the commitment of the United States to promote political and social liberalization, because, in their view, renewed U.S.-Saudi security and counterterrorism cooperation strengthens the ability of the Saudi government and the royal family to control the Saudi population and perceived political rivals. Some observers also believe that apparent Saudi reluctance to adopt broader social reforms is a product of the rapid transformation that the country has undergone since its establishment, some of which has been met with violent opposition.

By all accounts, the Al Saud family and its close allies dominate political and economic decision making in the kingdom, although Saudi leaders have taken some nominal steps since the early ¹¹⁰ Michael Freund, "Saudi Ambassador to U.S. Admits Boycott of Israel Still in Force," Jerusalem Post, June 22, 2006; and, Freund "U.S. Official Under Fire Over Saudi Flap," Jerusalem Post, June 25, 2006.

¹¹¹ "Ban on Israeli Goods in Place: Customs Chief," Arab News (Jeddah), January 4, 2007.

¹¹² Rachele Kliger, "Made in Israel, sold in Saudi Arabia," Jerusalem Post, March 21, 2008.

¹¹³ Department of the Treasury, Office of the Secretary, List of Countries Requiring Cooperation With an International Boycott, April 23, 2010, reprinted in the Federal Register, April 29, 2010 (Volume 75, Number 82), p. 22679.

1990s to respond to calls for the protection of individual liberties and for more participatory, accountable government. Within the ruling family, political differences and intra-clan and inter-generational rivalries appear to influence the distribution of government posts and the policy positions of leading actors on key issues. King Abdullah bin Abd al Aziz is widely considered to be supportive of some social and economic reforms, but appears to share the strong commitment of other leading royal figures to preserving the Al Saud family's national authority and the country's international influence. Although decision-making authority remains concentrated, policy decisions on controversial issues appear to reflect Saudi leaders' efforts to manage and address the demands of various interest groups. Outside observers and Saudi officials describe the policy-making process in the kingdom as being based on the pursuit and maintenance of consensus among key groups rather than being exclusively driven by the immediate needs of the royal family and its allies.

Saudi Arabia's conservative religious establishment and other non-government affiliated clerics remain socially and culturally influential. Members of the official clerical community continue to provide a degree of religious legitimacy to the rule of the royal family, but they have no formal political authority, outside of the judicial system. Important families, tribal groups, and business leaders also influence Saudi policy decisions on some issues. Political and religious advisory bodies, such as the 150-member, appointed Shura Council and the appointed Senior Ulema Council (made up of leading religious scholars), reflect the views of these influential groups but have only cursory powers.

Political Reform Debates and Elections

Saudis have debated questions of political legitimacy and authority in the kingdom throughout its history. Continuing petitions from reform activists since the 1990s have called on the royal family to make decision-making and governance structures more participatory, accountable, and responsive to citizens' needs. To date, these calls have been met with a mixture of embrace and resistance by the government. Since 2003, activists have submitted petitions calling for specific political reforms, including the introduction of a constitutional monarchy.¹¹⁴ Then-crown prince and now King Abdullah responded to initial calls for reform by instituting a "National Dialogue" process, which some observers have described as an unprecedented opportunity for Saudi citizens to publicly debate political and social issues and to offer criticism of government policies.¹¹⁵ However, the subsequent arrest and detention of signatories of various reform petitions has angered reform supporters and creates doubt among some Saudis and outside observers about the royal family's willingness to compromise on certain core principles, particularly on issues relating to the overarching authority of the royal family.

As such, tangible changes to the structure of the Saudi political system since 2003 have been extremely limited. In 2005, elections were held for half of the seats on 178 newly created municipal councils, which have been granted nominal powers to oversee local government and make recommendations to regional and national level authorities. In practice, some Saudis have criticized the government for failing, in their views, to implement recommendations made through the National Dialogue process or to adequately empower the municipal councils vis-à-vis municipal and regional authorities. Several municipal council members have resigned, and support for structural changes appears to remain strong among some Saudis. In September 2007, Prince Talal bin Abd al Aziz, half-brother of King Abdallah and a long-term reform advocate, called for the creation of a reform-oriented political party in the kingdom and criticized the detention of reform activists.¹¹⁶

¹¹⁴ See, International Crisis Group, "Can Saudi Arabia Reform Itself?" Middle East Report N^o28, July 14, 2004; and, Reuters, "Saudi Arabia Frees 3 Islamist Reformists," July 10, 2007.

¹¹⁵ Six sessions have been held under the auspices of the King Abdulaziz Center for National Dialogue, with corresponding regional preparation meetings. The subjects included national unity, combating extremism, women, youth, "dialogue with world cultures," and education policy. For more information, see <http://www.kacnd.org/eng/default.asp>.

Municipal council elections were scheduled to be held in 2009, but the election has been postponed. However, in April 2009, Prince Mansour bin Miteb bin Abd al Aziz, then-deputy minister for municipal and rural affairs, indicated that recommendations for improving the municipal council system were the subject of a recent conference held in Ras Tanura. Press reports suggest that proposals to allow women to vote in municipal council elections would be considered, along with recommendations intended to shape a forthcoming bylaw for the municipal council system. Prince Mansour was promoted to minister for municipal and rural affairs in November 2009 in the wake of his father's resignation.

Leadership and Succession

In the aftermath of King Fahd's death in 2005, media reports initially speculated that King Abdallah planned to name a second deputy prime minister (a de facto deputy crown prince) as his recent predecessors had done, but the king did not do so. Some commentators believed the king declined to take this step to avoid possible rivalries over future succession within the large Al Saud family, which numbers more than 5,000 princes, according to some estimates. On October 18, 2007, the royal court released royal decree A/135 to amend the Basic Law and create a Bayah [Arabic for "Allegiance"] Council to fill the positions of king and crown prince using defined procedures and criteria. Under the Bayah system, the 39 Allegiance Council members [members of the families of the 37 sons of the founder of the modern Saudi state, Abd al Aziz ibn Saud, plus two family members appointed by the king] will select the new crown prince in consultation with the king.

The new procedures, the members of the Council, and potential candidates have received increased attention since late 2008, when reports surfaced that current Crown Prince Sultan bin Abd al Aziz had received additional medical treatment for chronic illness in the United States and spent most of 2009 convalescing in Morocco. The advanced age of many of the leading members of the Al Saud (the sons of Abd al Aziz) suggests that there is the potential for a series of leadership changes in the kingdom over the coming decade. Possible future candidates for succession include the 21 remaining brothers and half-brothers of the king and a number of their sons and nephews. For example, many experts consider Prince Salman, Governor of Riyadh, and Prince Nayef, Minister of the Interior, as possible candidates for the position of crown prince when the position becomes vacant.¹¹⁷

¹¹⁶ Associated Press (AP), "Key Saudi Prince Says Plans To Form Political Party," September 4, 2007.

¹¹⁷ Like Crown Prince Sultan, both Prince Nayef and Prince Salman are full brothers of the late King Fahd, and belong to an influential group within the royal family whose mother was a member of the Sudayri tribe. Some commentators note that the conservative Prince Nayef is thought to have resisted reforms supported by Abdallah, while Prince Salman has a lower international profile than Crown Prince Sultan or Prince Nayef.

Some observers contend that the likelihood that Prince Nayef will serve as the next crown prince has increased following his promotion to the position of second deputy prime minister in March 2009. Intelligence director Prince Muqrin bin Abd al Aziz also has been mentioned as a potential candidate.¹¹⁸ Other members of the next generation of Saudi leaders also have distinguished themselves and accumulated important responsibilities, including Prince Mohammed bin Nayef, Prince Khaled bin Sultan, Prince Khaled al Faisal, and Prince Miteb bin Abdullah.

Some observers have speculated that the appointment of King Abdullah's private secretary, Khaled al Tuwayjri, as secretary general of the Allegiance Council may indicate the king's desire to influence the Council's operation in the event of his death or incapacitation. The lack of reference in the decree to Saudi Arabia's clerical establishment also has drawn comments from some academics who have speculated that the omission may have been an intentional step to sideline the religious authorities. Others contend that Saudi clerics have not had a direct role in the royal family's critical decision-making processes for decades but rather have served in advisory and legitimating roles before and after key decisions are taken—roles that are likely to continue.

Social Reform Debates and Recent Leadership Changes

Since 2006, significant public debates have occurred on social issues such as the powers of religious police, education reform proposals, the roles and rights of women, and the integration of Shiites into Saudi Arabia's predominantly Sunni society. Each has illustrated the challenges Saudi leaders face in responding to some groups' calls for change while preserving national traditions and pursuing their own political goals.

- Numerous allegations of abuse leveled against members of the Commission for the Promotion of Virtue and the Prevention of Vice (Saudi Arabia's religious police) have fueled a public debate among Saudis, many of whom appear not to question the underlying legitimacy of the Commission as an institution, but may have serious concerns about the Commission's statutory powers, the professionalism of its employees, and the protection of due process for detained individuals.
- Similarly, many Saudis have expressed support for education reform proposals as a means of improving the economic opportunities available to the kingdom's young population. However, others have spoken out against curricular reforms they perceive to be either contrary to Saudi religious and cultural traditions or taken in response to the wishes of outsiders, including the United States.
- The roles and rights of women remain subjects of interest in the United States and subjects of intense debate in Saudi Arabia. Some Saudi activists advocate for greater employment, marital, and political rights for Saudi women, while others seek to maintain status quo arrangements based on their religious and cultural preferences. The issue of restrictions on female driving, often discussed as an example of gender bias by outside observers, is debated among many Saudis as both a cultural and economic issue; the views of some Saudi families appear to be changing as they begin to face limits in their ability to meet the costs of hiring ¹¹⁸ For one analyst's views, see Simon Henderson, "Saudi Leadership Crisis Looms: Health of Crown Prince Falters," Washington Institute for Near East Policy - PolicyWatch #1459, January 21, 2009.

- drivers so that mothers and daughters can pursue economic and educational goals outside the home.
- King Abdullah has made some high-level public attempts to improve sectarian relations between Sunni and Shiite leaders, but these efforts have been undermined amid ongoing claims of abuses against Shiites and the issuance of a series of statements from clerics who regard Shiite minority groups as religiously aberrant and potentially politically disloyal. Since early 2007, Shiite groups in the Eastern Province and the southern region of Najran have reported a number of human rights violations and restrictions on their political and religious rights, in spite of some government attempts to create a more tolerant atmosphere.¹¹⁹

Leadership changes announced by King Abdullah in February 2009 appear designed in part to address several of the concerns at the heart of the social reform debates described above. The director of the Commission for the Promotion of Virtue and the Prevention of Vice was replaced, and its new director has pledged to continue to improve the professionalism of Commission personnel. Sheikh Saleh bin Abdullah bin Humaid, the former chairman of the Shura Council, has been named as the chairman of the Supreme Judicial Council and will work with new Minister of Justice Mohammad Al Eissa to implement judicial reform. The former judicial council head, Sheikh Saleh bin Mohammed Al Luhaydan was perceived to have resisted some reform efforts and caused controversy in 2008 by making statements regarding the potential execution of prominent media industry figures on religious grounds.

King Abdallah also named a former intelligence official Prince Faisal bin Mohammed bin Abd al Aziz Al Saud as education minister in a shift that may indicate the king's intention to strengthen efforts to root out extremism in the education sector. Norah Al Fayezi will serve as Prince Faisal bin Mohammed's deputy, making her the first female deputy minister in the kingdom's history; her appointment has been met with opposition from conservatives.¹²⁰ Finally, in March 2009 King Abdullah named his son Prince Meshal bin Abdullah as the replacement for the former governor of Najran province, who was removed in December 2008 in a move widely interpreted as a positive gesture toward local Shiite residents. However, as noted above, clashes between Sunni and Shiite citizens and Shiites and security forces in Medina and the Eastern Province since February 2009 have placed further stress on sectarian relations in the kingdom.

Human Rights

According to the Department of State, several categories of human rights violations occurred in Saudi Arabia during 2009, along with some improvements in government efforts to implement judicial reform and to improve educational opportunities for women.¹²¹ The Saudi National ¹¹⁹ OSC Document FEA20070501128188, "Report On Situation Of Saudi Shiites 1 Jan 06-30 Apr 07" Al Rasid Newspaper (Saudi Arabia) April 24, 2007; and, OSC Document GMP20080514866001, "Saudi Authorities Arrest Fatimid Leader," Al Rasid Newspaper May 14, 2008.

¹²⁰ Jumana Al Tamimi, "High-ranking female official settles in job," Washington Times, April 1, 2009; and Gulf News, "Hardliners want Saudi woman minister sacked," April 10, 2009.

¹²¹ Reported violations included "no right to change the government peacefully; disappearances; torture and physical abuse; poor prison and detention center conditions; arbitrary arrest and incommunicado detention; denial of public trials and lack of due process in the judicial system; political prisoners; restrictions on civil liberties such as freedoms of speech (including the Internet), assembly, association, movement, and severe restrictions on religious freedom; and corruption and lack of government transparency. Violence against women, violations of the rights of children, and discrimination on the basis of gender, religion, sect, and ethnicity were common. The employment sponsorship system (continued...)

Society for Human Rights, an independent organization approved by the Saudi government in 2004, also reported and investigated alleged human rights abuses during the year, including violations reported by Saudi citizens.¹²² In 2008, Human Rights Watch argued that “violations of defendants’ fundamental rights in Saudi Arabia are so systemic that it is hard to reconcile the existing criminal justice system with basic principles of fairness, the rule of law and international human rights standards.”¹²³ Saudi authorities have launched a comprehensive judicial restructuring process aimed at improving some identified deficiencies and many observers expect that leadership changes announced by King Abdullah in February 2009 will improve the likelihood that several influential judicial bodies will implement planned reforms. Notable recent cases involving human rights activists or alleged abuses include the arrest and detention of Saudi blogger Fouad Al Farhan (released April 2008) and human rights advocate and university professor Dr. Matrook Al Faleh (released January 2009).¹²⁴ Saudi Arabia served as a member of the United Nations Human Rights Council through June 2009.

Religious Freedom

The State Department has designated Saudi Arabia as a “country of particular concern” since 2004 with regard to restrictions on religious freedom. According to the most recent International Religious Freedom Report (released October 26, 2009) religious freedom remains “severely restricted” in Saudi Arabia.¹²⁵ Non-Muslims continue to be prohibited from worshiping publicly. However, the report noted for the third year in a row that U.S. officials observed some positive developments that “would continue progress” and noted the king’s personal calls for interfaith dialogue and religious tolerance among Muslims. According to the report:

Improvements included limited education reform, better protection of the right to possess and use personal religious materials, augmented efforts to curb and investigate harassment by the CPVPV, increased media coverage and criticism of the CPVPV, somewhat greater authority and capacity for official human rights entities to operate, and measures to combat extremist ideology.

The Obama Administration waived the imposition of sanctions on Saudi Arabia in May 2009 as a result of these observed steps.¹²⁶ U.S. organizations such as Freedom House have criticized limited the rights of foreign workers and remained a severe problem.” U.S. Department of State, Bureau of Human Rights, Democracy, and Labor, Country Reports on Human Rights Practices 2009 - Saudi Arabia, March 11, 2010. Available at: <http://www.state.gov/g/drl/rls/hrrpt/2009/nea/136079.htm>.

(...continued)

¹²² OSC Report GMP20100316869002, “Saudi Human Rights Commission Publishes Annual Report,” Al-Sharq al-Awsat (London) March 16, 2010.

¹²³ Christoph Wilcke, “Re-education, Saudi style,” Guardian Unlimited (UK), April 25, 2008. Wilcke is the primary author of “Precarious Justice: Arbitrary Detention and Unfair Trials in the Deficient Criminal Justice System of Saudi Arabia,” Human Rights Watch, Volume 20, No. 3(E), March 2008. Available at <http://hrw.org/reports/2008/saudijustice0308/>.

¹²⁴ See Faiza Saleh Ambah, “Saudi Activist Blogger Freed After 4 Months in Jail Without Charge,” Washington Post, April 27, 2008; and, Faiza Saleh Ambah, “Saudi Critic Jailed After Decrying Justice System,” Washington Post, May 21, 2008.

¹²⁵ U.S. Department of State, Bureau of Democracy, Human Rights and Labor, International Religious Freedom Report 2009, October 26, 2009. Saudi Arabia entry available at <http://www.state.gov/g/drl/rls/irf/2009/127357.htm>.

¹²⁶ State Department Public Notice 6608, Secretary of State’s Determination Under the International Religious Freedom Act of 1998, Federal Register: May 11, 2009 (Volume 74, Number 89), p. 21843.

restrictions on religious freedom in Saudi Arabia and questioned the Saudi government's commitment to stated reform initiatives, including education reform.

Consular Issues

Prior to 2001, Saudi nationals received the highest number of U.S. non-immigrant entry visas issued to nationals of any Arab country, and were second only to Israel and Turkey in the Middle East. Saudis in Saudi Arabia were able to utilize so-called 'third party' expedited visa services whereby travel agencies were permitted to forward visa materials to consular officials at the U.S. Embassy for processing and the applicants would later receive their entry visas by mail. The revelations that 15 of the September 11 hijackers were Saudi nationals who had legally obtained U.S. visas and that three of the hijackers reportedly had obtained their U.S. visas using the expedited "visa express" arrangements led to significant changes in U.S. visa policy in Saudi Arabia and around the world.¹²⁷ Following the 2001 attacks, third party visa issuance in Saudi Arabia was specifically prohibited under Section 428(i) of the Homeland Security Act of 2002 (P.L. 107-296).¹²⁸ The Department of State terminated the expedited visa system in Saudi Arabia in 2002 and significantly increased the visa interview rates for Saudi nationals.¹²⁹

As in other countries, new administrative arrangements were made at U.S. consular facilities in Saudi Arabia to accommodate new security requirements. As a result, visa issuances to Saudi nationals slowed along with Saudi application rates. Global non-immigrant visa issuance rates declined after 2001, and issuance rates dropped steeply for Saudi Arabian nationals, but have now returned to their previous level. (See Figure 2 below.) In addition to complaints about backlogs and perceived discrimination, Saudi officials and nationals voiced strong concerns about declines in the number of Saudis visiting the United States for travel, work, and study. People-to-people linkages have supported U.S.-Saudi relations over time, particularly to the extent that many leading Saudis have pursued their higher education in the United States since the 1960s. U.S. officials, who had long sought visa reciprocity for U.S. citizens with regard to multiple entry and long-term visas for Saudi Arabia, reportedly met resistance from Saudi authorities in light of the post-9/11 U.S. policy changes.

New U.S. consular administrative practices¹³⁰ and broader Saudi awareness of new U.S. visa requirements reportedly have contributed to an ease in visa backlogs and delays in recent months.¹³¹ Overall, visa issuance rates for Saudi nationals have increased annually since 2003. (See Figure 2 below.) The Department of State has opened a permanent visa issuance facility at the U.S. consulate in Dhahran, and in April 2008, then-U.S. Ambassador Ford Fraker announced that the U.S. government aimed to double the number of student visas issued to Saudi students within five years.

¹²⁷ Jonathan Peterson, "Express Visa Program May Have Benefitted 3 Hijackers," Los Angeles Times, December 17, 2001.

¹²⁸ Section 428(i) reads as follows: "Notwithstanding any other provision of law, after the date of the enactment of this Act all third party screening programs in Saudi Arabia shall be terminated. On-site personnel of the Department of Homeland Security shall review all visa applications prior to adjudication."

¹²⁹ William C. Mann, "Feds End Visa Shortcut for Saudis," Associated Press, July 20, 2002.

¹³⁰ Saudis nationals have the option of scheduling visa interview appointments at the U.S. Embassy in Riyadh using an online reservation system, and the Embassy has frequently advised Saudi students on how best to avoid having their studies in the United States interrupted by visa renewal requirements.

¹³¹ Briefings from U.S. Department of State personnel, Washington, D.C. and Riyadh Saudi Arabia, February 2008.

Under the terms of a consular agreement announced in May 2008, Saudi students are allowed to travel to and from the United States for up to five years without having to reapply for a visa after two years, as previously required.¹³² The Department of Homeland Security Student and Exchange Visitor Information System (SEVIS) provides status and identification information for U.S. government verification throughout foreign students' stays in the United States. In the 111th Congress, S. 2944 and S. 3077 would empower the Department of Homeland Security to conduct on-site reviews of visa applications in Saudi Arabia and other countries and, if necessary, to revoke visas held by nationals of Saudi Arabia and the nationals of a number of other specific countries.

Figure 2. Non-Immigrant U.S. Visas Issued to Saudi Nationals, 1996-2009

Sources: CRS graphic derived from data in U.S. Department of State, Visa Office Report, 2005, Table XVIII (Part I) "Nonimmigrant Visas Issued by Nationality (Including Border Crossing Cards), Fiscal Year 1996-2005"; and, Department of State, Visa Office Report, 2009, Table XVII "Nonimmigrant Visas Issued by Nationality (Including Border Crossing Cards), Fiscal Year 2000-2009." Available at http://www.travel.state.gov/pdf/FY09AnnualReport_TableXIX.pdf.

Some Members of Congress have expressed concern about U.S. visa issuance to Saudi nationals, and legislation has been introduced in the 111th Congress seeking to influence U.S. visa policy toward Saudi Arabia. Some Members of Congress have expressed concern about restrictions on the importation of non-Islamic religious materials and symbols into Saudi Arabia and about reported visa restrictions for Jewish visitors to the kingdom or Israeli passport stamp holders.

¹³² Saudi student visa holders, like student visa holders from other countries, are required to remain "in status" and be enrolled in a full course of study. According to the Department of State, "This decision to expand visa reciprocity was taken in light of the economic benefits associated with more business, tourist, and student travelers and heightened cooperation on security and counterterrorism between the U.S. and Saudi Arabia. This decision also reflects recent measures taken by the U.S. to enhance visa processing and security, such as online visa applications and enhanced biometrics." U.S. Department of State response to CRS inquiry, May 20, 2008.

In the 110th Congress, H.R. 2981 specifically sought to ban the issuance of visas to Saudi nationals until these concerns are addressed. H.R. 3217 sought to prohibit the issuance of student and diversity immigrant visas to Saudi Arabian nationals on security grounds absent Presidential review.

In the 111th Congress, H.R. 1288, the Saudi Arabia Accountability Act of 2009, would prohibit the issuance of any visa to any Saudi citizen “until the President certifies that the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia does not discriminate in the issuance of visas on the basis of religious affiliation or heritage.”

Further Reading and Historical Resources

Paul Aarts and Gerd Nonneman (eds.), Saudi Arabia in the Balance: Political Economy, Society, Foreign Affairs, New York University Press, 2006.

Rachel Bronson, Thicker than Oil: America's Uneasy Partnership with Saudi Arabia, Oxford University Press, 2006.

Steve Coll, Ghost Wars: The Secret History of the CIA, Afghanistan, and Bin Laden, from the Soviet Invasion to September 10, 2001, Penguin Press, 2004.

Steve Coll, The Bin Ladens: An Arabian Family in the American Century, Penguin Press, 2008.

John S. Habib, Ibn Saud's Warriors of Islam: The Ikhwan of Najd and their Role in the Creation of the Saudi Kingdom, 1910-1930, E.J. Brill, 1978.

Thomas Hegghammer, "Terrorist Recruitment and Radicalisation in Saudi Arabia," Middle East Policy, Volume 13, Number 4, 2006.

Joseph Kostiner, The Making of Saudi Arabia, 1916-1936, From Chieftaincy to Monarchical State, Oxford University Press, 1993.

Robert Lacey, The Kingdom: Arabia & The House of Sa'ud, Harcourt Brace Jovanovich, 1982.

Thomas W. Lippman, Inside the Mirage: America's Fragile Partnership with Saudi Arabia, Westview Press, 2004.

David E. Long, Culture and Customs of Saudi Arabia, Greenwood Press, 2005.

David E. Long, The United States and Saudi Arabia: Ambivalent Allies, Westview Press, 1985.

Madawi Al Rasheed, A History of Saudi Arabia, Cambridge University Press, 2002.

Madawi Al Rasheed, Contesting the Saudi State, Cambridge University Press, 2006.

Yaroslav Trofimov, The Siege of Mecca: The Forgotten Uprising in Islam's Holiest Shrine and the Birth of Al Qaeda, Doubleday, 2007.

Alexei Vassiliev, History of Saudi Arabia, New York University Press, 2000.

Robert Vitalis, America's Kingdom: Mythmaking on the Saudi Oil Frontier, Stanford University Press, 2006.

Mai Yamani, Cradle of Islam: The Hijaz and the Quest for an Arabian Identity, I.B. Tauris, 2004.

Mai Yamani, Changed Identities: The Challenge of the New Generation in Saudi Arabia, University of British Columbia Press, 2005.

Appendix A. Recent Proposed Arms Sales

On October 4, 2007, Congress was notified of a possible sale of Light Armored Vehicles (LAV) and High Mobility Multi-Purpose Wheeled Vehicles (HMMWV) and associated equipment. Specifically, 37 Light Armored Vehicles-Assault Gun (LAV-AG); 26 LAV-25mm; 48 LAV Personnel Carriers; 5 Reconnaissance LAVs; 5 LAV Ambulances; 3 LAV Recovery Vehicles; 25 M1165A1 High Mobility Multi-purpose Wheeled Vehicles (HMMWV); 25 M1165A1 HMMWV with winch; 124 M240 7.62mm Machine Guns; 525 AN/PVS-7D Night Vision Goggles (NVGs); various M978A2 and M984A2 Heavy Expanded Mobility Tactical Trucks, family of Medium Tactical Vehicles, 120mm Mortar Towed, M242 25mm guns, spare and repair parts; sets, kits, and outfits; and support services and equipment. The estimated value of the sale, if all options are exercised, could be as high as $631 million. Transmittal No. 08-03.¹³³

On December 7, 2007, Congress was notified of a possible sale of five sets of Airborne Early Warning (AEW) and Command, Control and Communications (C3) mission equipment/Radar System Improvement Program (RSIP) Group B kits for subsequent installation and checkout in five E-3 Airborne Warning and Control Systems (AWACS). This proposed sale will also include spare and repair parts, support equipment, documentation, contractor engineering and technical support, and other program support. The estimated value of the sale, if all options are exercised, could be as high as $400 million. Transmittal No. 08-28.¹³⁴

On December 7, 2007, Congress was notified of a possible sale of 40 AN/AAQ-33 SNIPER Advanced Targeting Pods, aircraft installation and checkout, digital data recorders/cartridges, pylons, spare and repair parts, support equipment, publications and technical documentation, contractor engineering and technical support, and other program support. The estimated value of the sale, if all options are exercised, could be as high as $220 million. Transmittal No. 08-29.¹³⁵

On January 14, 2008, Congress was notified of a possible sale of 900 Joint Direct Attack Munition (JDAM) tail kits (which include 550 Guided Bomb Unit (GBU)-38 kits for MK-82 bombs, 250 GBU-31 kits for MK-84 bombs, and 100 GBU-31 kits for BLU-109 bombs). Also included are bomb components, mission planning, aircraft integration, publications and technical manuals, spare and repair parts, support equipment, contractor engineering and technical support, and other related support elements. The estimated value of the sale, if all options are exercised, could be as high as $123 million. Transmittal No. 08-18.¹³⁶

On July 18, 2008, Congress was notified of a possible sale of continued assistance in the modernization of the Saudi Arabian National Guard (SANG) as well as associated equipment and services. The estimated value, if all options are exercised, could be as high as $1.8 billion. The sale would support the continuation of the PM-SANG program (see “Saudi Arabian National Guard Modernization Program (PM-SANG)”) through December 2013. Transmittal No. 08-67.¹³⁷

¹³³ Details available at http://www.dscamilitary.com/PressReleases/36-b/2007/Saudi_08-03.pdf.

¹³⁴ Details available at http://www.dscamilitary.com/PressReleases/36-b/2007/Saudi_08-28.pdf.

¹³⁵ Details available at http://www.dscamilitary.com/PressReleases/36-b/2007/Saudi_08-29.pdf.

¹³⁶ Details available at http://www.dscamilitary.com/PressReleases/36-b/2008/Saudi_Arabia_08-18.pdf.

¹³⁷ Details available at http://www.dscamilitary.com/PressReleases/36-b/2008/Saudi_Arabia_08-67.pdf

On September 9, 2008, Congress was notified of a possible sale of 12 AH-64D APACHE Longbow Helicopters, along with 30 T700-GE-701D Engines, 12 Modernized Targeting Acquisition and Designation Systems/Pilot Night Vision Sensors, 4 each AN/APG-78 Fire Control Radars and AN/APR-48 Radar Frequency Interferometers, 28 M299 HELLFIRE Longbow Missile Launchers, 12 AN/ALQ-144C(V)3 Infrared Jammers, 12 AN/APR-39A(V)4 Radar Signal Detecting Sets, 12 AN/ALQ-136(V)5 Radar Jammers, 12 AAR-57(V)3/5 Common Missile Warning Systems, 36 Improved Countermeasures Dispensers, and 12 AN/AVR-2B Laser Warning Sets. The sale would also include U.S. Government and contractor technical support and other related elements of program support. The estimated value of the sale, if all options are exercised, could be as high as $598 million. Transmittal No. 08-75.¹³⁸

On September 26, 2008, Congress was notified of a possible sale of 80 Link 16 Multifunctional Information Distribution System/Low Volume Terminals (MIDS/LVT-1) to be installed on United Kingdom Eurofighter Typhoon aircraft, as well as associated equipment and services. The estimated value of the sale, if all options are exercised, could be as high as $31 million. Transmittal No. 08-101.¹³⁹

On September 26, 2008, Congress was notified of a possible sale of 250 All-Up-Round AIM-9X SIDEWINDER Missiles, 84 AIM-9X SIDEWINDER Captive Air Training Missiles (CATMs), 12 AIM-9X SIDEWINDER Dummy Air Training Missiles (DATMs), as well as associated equipment and services, personnel training and training equipment, contractor engineering and technical support services, and other related elements of logistics support. The estimated value of the sale, if all options are exercised, could be as high as $164 million. Transmittal No. 08-88.¹⁴⁰

On September 26, 2008, Congress was notified of a possible sale of 17 AN/FPS-117 radars, including installation and checkout, engineering, calibration, reintegration, testing, support equipment, spare and repair parts, personnel training, publications and technical data, U.S. Government and contractor technical assistance and other related elements of logistics support. The estimated value of the sale, if all options are exercised, could be as high as $145 million. Transmittal No. 08-88.¹⁴¹

On August 5, 2009, Congress was notified of a possible sale of Tactical Airborne Surveillance System (TASS) aircraft upgrades, including spare and repair parts, support and test equipment, personnel training and training equipment, modification/construction of facilities, U.S. Government and contractor engineering and support services and other related elements of logistics support. The estimated value of the sale, if all options are exercised, could be as high as $530 million. Transmittal No. 09-20.¹⁴²

On August 6, 2009, Congress was notified of a possible sale of Communication Navigation and Surveillance/Air Traffic Management upgrades for Saudi Arabia's E-3 Airborne Warning and

¹³⁸ Details available at http://www.dscamilitary.com/PressReleases/36-b/2008/Saudi_Arabia_08-75.pdf

¹³⁹ Details available at http://www.dscamilitary.com/PressReleases/36-b/2008/Saudi_Arabia_08-101.pdf

¹⁴⁰ Details available at http://www.dscamilitary.com/PressReleases/36-b/2008/Saudi_Arabia_08-88.pdf

¹⁴¹ Details available at http://www.dscamilitary.com/PressReleases/36-b/2008/Saudi_Arabia_08-90.pdf

¹⁴² Details available at http://www.dscamilitary.com/PressReleases/36-b/2009/Saudia_Arabia_09-20.pdf

Control System (AWACS) airplane fleet. The estimated value of the sale, if all options are exercised, could be as high as $1.5 billion. Transmittal No. 09-40.¹⁴³

On December 17, 2009, Congress was notified of a possible sale of 2,742 BGM-71E-4B-RF Tube-Launched, Optically-Tracked, Wire-Guided (TOW-2A) Radio Frequency missiles and associated parts, equipment, training and logistical support for the Saudi Arabian National Guard (SANG). The estimated value of the sale, if all options are exercised, could be as high as $177 million billion. Transmittal No. 09-63.¹⁴⁴

¹⁴³ Details available at http://www.dsca.mil/PressReleases/36-b/2009/Saudia_Arabia_09-40.pdf

¹⁴⁴ Details available at http://www.dsca.mil/PressReleases/36-b/2009/Saudia_Arabia_09-63.pdf

Appendix B. Text of Saudi Peace Initiatives

Final Declaration of the Twelfth Arab Summit Conference, adopted at Fez on 9 September 1982

The following text reflects principles proposed by then-Crown Prince and now late King Fahd bin Abd al Aziz Al Saud in August 1981 and later adopted by the Arab League in September 1982.¹⁴⁵ It is commonly referred to as “the Fahd eight point plan,” “the Fahd principles,” and “the Fez declaration,” among other terms.

Convinced of the ability of the Arab nation to achieve its legitimate objectives and to put an end to the aggression, on the basis of the fundamental principles laid down by the Arab Summit Conferences, in view of the desire of the Arab States to continue to strive by every means for the achievement of peace based on justice in the Middle East region, taking account of the plan of His Excellency President Habib Bourguiba, which holds international legality to be the basis for the solution of the Palestinian question, and of the plan of His Majesty King Fahd Ibn Abdul Aziz for peace in the Middle East and in the light of the discussions and observations of Their Majesties, Their Excellencies and Their Highnesses, the Kings, Presidents and Amirs, the Conference adopted the following principles:

1. Israel to withdraw from all Arab territory occupied in 1967, including Arab Jerusalem.
2. Israeli settlements built on Arab land after 1967 to be dismantled, including those in Arab Jerusalem.
3. A guarantee of freedom of worship for all religions in the Holy Places.
4. An affirmation of the right of the Palestinian Arab people to return to their homes and compensation for those who do not wish to return.
5. The West Bank and the Gaza Strip to have a transitional period under the auspices of the United Nations for a period not exceeding several months.
6. An independent Palestinian State should be set up with Jerusalem as its capital.
7. All States in the region should be able to live in peace in the region.
8. The United Nations or Member States of the United Nations to guarantee the carrying out of these provisions.

Beirut Declaration on Saudi Peace Initiative

The following is the text of the peace initiative proposed by then-Crown Prince and current King Abdullah bin Abd al Aziz Al Saud and adopted by the Arab League in March 2002. It is commonly referred to as “the Beirut declaration,” “the Saudi peace initiative,” and “the Arab ¹⁴⁵ Letter dated December 3, 1982 from the Permanent Representative of Morocco to the United Nations addressed to the Secretary-General, United Nations General Assembly Security Council Document A/37/696, S/15510, December 15, 1982.

League peace proposal,” among other terms. The following translation is available in the United States Institute of Peace - Peace Agreements Digital Collection.

March 28, 2002

The Council of Arab States at the Summit Level at its 14th Ordinary Session, reaffirming the resolution taken in June 1996 at the Cairo Extra-Ordinary Arab Summit that a just and comprehensive peace in the Middle East is the strategic option of the Arab countries, to be achieved in accordance with international legality, and which would require a comparable commitment on the part of the Israeli government.

Having listened to the statement made by his royal highness Prince Abdullah bin Abdul Aziz, crown prince of the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia, in which his highness presented his initiative calling for full Israeli withdrawal from all the Arab territories occupied since June 1967, in implementation of Security Council Resolutions 242 and 338, reaffirmed by the Madrid Conference of 1991 and the land-for-peace principle, and Israel's acceptance of an independent Palestinian state with East Jerusalem as its capital, in return for the establishment of normal relations in the context of a comprehensive peace with Israel.

Emanating from the conviction of the Arab countries that a military solution to the conflict will not achieve peace or provide security for the parties, the council:

1. Requests Israel to reconsider its policies and declare that a just peace is its strategic option as well.

2. Further calls upon Israel to affirm:

I- Full Israeli withdrawal from all the territories occupied since 1967, including the Syrian Golan Heights, to the June 4, 1967 lines as well as the remaining occupied Lebanese territories in the south of Lebanon.

II- Achievement of a just solution to the Palestinian refugee problem to be agreed upon in accordance with UN General Assembly Resolution 194.

III- The acceptance of the establishment of a sovereign independent Palestinian state on the Palestinian territories occupied since June 4, 1967 in the West Bank and Gaza Strip, with East Jerusalem as its capital.

3. Consequently, the Arab countries affirm the following:

I- Consider the Arab-Israeli conflict ended, and enter into a peace agreement with Israel, and provide security for all the states of the region.

II- Establish normal relations with Israel in the context of this comprehensive peace.

4. Assures the rejection of all forms of Palestinian patriation which conflict with the special circumstances of the Arab host countries.

5. Calls upon the government of Israel and all Israelis to accept this initiative in order to safeguard the prospects for peace and stop the further shedding of blood, enabling the Arab countries and Israel to live in peace and good neighbourliness and provide future generations with security, stability and prosperity .

6. Invites the international community and all countries and organisations to support this initiative.

7. Requests the chairman of the summit to form a special committee composed of some of its concerned member states and the secretary general of the League of Arab States to pursue the necessary contacts to gain support for this initiative at all levels, particularly from the United Nations, the Security Council, the United States of America, the Russian Federation, the Muslim states and the European Union.

Author Contact Information

Christopher M. Blanchard
Analyst in Middle Eastern Affairs
cblanchard@crs.loc.gov, 7-0428