

CRS Report for Congress

Received through the CRS Web

Serbia and Montenegro: Current Situation and U.S. Policy

Updated June 8, 2004

Steven Woehrel
Specialist in European Affairs
Foreign Affairs, Defense, and Trade Division

Serbia and Montenegro: Current Situation and U.S. Policy

Summary

Despite defeats in wars in Croatia, Bosnia and Kosovo, international isolation, and the impoverishment of his people, Slobodan Milosevic managed to stay in power in Serbia for over 10 years. His reign came to an end on October 5, 2000, when he was deposed from power by a popular revolt after he refused to concede defeat in an election for the post of President of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (FRY) won by his opponent, Vojislav Kostunica. Parliamentary elections in Serbia held in December 2000 resulted in a crushing victory for the Democratic Opposition of Serbia (DOS) coalition over the former ruling parties of the Milosevic regime. Although it achieved some successes, the DOS government was beset with internal conflicts almost from its beginning, including over cooperation with the Yugoslav war crimes tribunal. It received its greatest blow in March 2003, when Serbian Prime Minister Zoran Djindjic was murdered by organized crime figures linked to the Serbian security apparatus. In the wake of the assassination, the Serbian government arrested hundreds of organized crime figures. However, some observers question whether Serbian leaders have the will to extirpate the deeply-rooted connections between organized crime and political power in Serbia.

On December 28, 2003, the extreme nationalist Serbian Radical Party won a stunning victory in early Serbian parliamentary elections, but fell short of a majority. In March 2004, a minority government of democratic parties formed a government without the Radicals. However, the government depends on the parliamentary support of Milosevic's Socialists, who are not in the government. Serbian presidential elections scheduled for June 2004 could deal a blow to Serbia's reforms and international standing, if Radical Party candidate Tomislav Nikolic is elected.

In a years-long confrontation with Milosevic, Montenegrin leader Milo Djukanovic seized control of virtually all levers of federal power on the republic's territory. He has sought to achieve an independent Montenegro, but opposition from the United States, European Union and Russia has stymied these efforts, at least for the near future. In February 2003, under heavy EU pressure, Serbia and Montenegro formed a loose union of two republics. Montenegro agreed to put off plans for independence for at least three years. Montenegrin officials say that they could call an independence referendum as early as 2005.

Since Milosevic's downfall, Congress has appropriated significant amounts of aid to Serbia and Montenegro to promote reforms. Each fiscal year from FY2001 to FY2004, Congress conditioned U.S. aid to Serbia on a certification by the President that a series of conditions had been met by Serbia, including cooperation with the Yugoslav war crimes tribunal, an end to support for separate Bosnian Serb institutions, and respect for minority rights. In March 2004, the Administration suspended about $25 million in aid to Serbia, due to its failure to cooperate with the Yugoslav war crimes tribunal. This report will be updated as events warrant.

Contents

Political Background .....	1
Current Political Situation in Serbia .....	3
Political Situation in Montenegro .....	5
Kosovo and Southern Serbia .....	7
Economic Situation .....	9
International Response .....	11
European Union .....	11
NATO .....	12
U.S. Policy .....	12
Cooperation with the War Crimes Tribunal .....	13
Serbia and Montenegro and the International Criminal Court .....	14
U.S. Aid .....	15
Congressional Response .....	15

Serbia and Montenegro: Current Situation and U.S. Policy

Political Background

Despite defeats in wars in Croatia, Bosnia and Kosovo, international isolation and the impoverishment of his people, Serbian strongman Slobodan Milosevic remained in power for over 10 years. He did this by maintaining tight control over key institutions (such as the police, army, judiciary and most of the media) as well as much of the economy. He retained a reservoir of support among some sectors of the population, such as the elderly and those living in rural areas, in part by appealing to Serbian nationalism. He also played skillfully on weaknesses and divisions in Serbia's opposition.

Milosevic's reign came to an end on October 5, 2000, when he was deposed from power by a popular revolt after he refused to concede defeat in an election for the post of President of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (FRY) won by his opponent, Vojislav Kostunica on September 24,

Serbia and Montenegro at a Glance

In February 2003, the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (FRY) was replaced by a loose union of the FRY's two republics, now simply called "Serbia and Montenegro." Each republic has its own president, parliament and government, which are responsible for most government functions on its territory. (Before Milosevic's rise to power, Serbia had two autonomous provinces on its territory, Vojvodina and Kosovo, but Milosevic eliminated many of their powers. Currently Vojvodina retains some elements of autonomy and Kosovo is under U.N. administration.) The functions of new joint governing bodies are limited largely to foreign policy and defense.

Area: 102,173 sq. km. (slightly larger than Kentucky), of which Serbia (including Kosovo) 88,361 sq. km., and Montenegro 13,812 sq. km.

Population: 10.39 million (1991 census), of which Serbia 7.82 million (excluding Kosovo), Montenegro 0.62 million, and Kosovo 1.96 million (est.).

Source: The Statesman's Yearbook 2001.

2000.<sup>1</sup> Milosevic's party, the Socialist Party of Serbia (SPS) was also trounced in simultaneous elections to the federal parliament and local governments.

The victor in the election was a coalition of often-feuding opposition parties called the Democratic Opposition of Serbia (DOS). The DOS agreed on a joint slate of candidates for the federal parliament and local elections. They named Vojislav Kostunica as their joint candidate to run against Milosevic for the federal Presidency. Kostunica's main advantages, according to many observers, were a reputation for honesty and his long-standing, unwavering opposition to Milosevic. Kostunica, a former law professor, sharply criticized the Milosevic regime's cynical manipulation of the law and legal system, as well as the often lawless behavior of those close to the regime. He emphasized the need for the rule of law in Serbia, similar to that practiced in other European countries and the United States. Kostunica holds strongly nationalist views. He has been a fierce critic of United States and NATO policy in Kosovo and Bosnia. This may also have made him popular with many Serbs. After their victory in federal and local levels, the DOS swept to further victories in elections for the Serbian parliament on December 23, 2000. On January 25, 2001, the parliament approved a DOS government led by Prime Minister Zoran Djindjic.

However, soon after the DOS took power, tensions arose between supporters of FRY President Kostunica and Serbian Prime Minister Djindjic. These conflicts slowed reforms and disillusioned many Serbs, who once had high hopes that Milosevic's overthrow would lead to a dramatic improvement in their living standards. One key subject of dispute was cooperation with the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia (ICTY). On June 28, 2001, the Serbian government transferred Milosevic to the ICTY to face war crimes charges. Serbian Prime Minister Zoran Djindjic defended the transfer of Slobodan Milosevic and other indictees, saying they were needed so that the FRY could receive vitally-needed international aid. Kostunica condemned the transfer of Milosevic as illegal and claimed that he had not been informed of the move beforehand. The DOS left the Serbian government in August 2001.

The DOS government received another blow on March 12, 2003, when Djindjic was assassinated by two gunmen as he got out of his car in front of the Serbian cabinet office. Serbian police soon learned that organized crime figures linked to the Serbian security apparatus were responsible for Djindjic's murder. One of Djindjic's accused assassins, now in custody, was a senior officer of the Special Operations Unit (JSO). The JSO conducted highly sensitive operations for the Milosevic regime, reportedly including war crimes in Bosnia and Kosovo. Djindjic allowed it to continue operating after Milosevic's fall because its leader, Col. Milorad Lukovic (known as "Legija"), had provided support to the democrats during the anti-Milosevic uprising. The gunman told interrogators that he killed Djindjic after Legija (who had since retired and become the head of the powerful Zemun organized crime gang) told him Djindjic was planning to dissolve the JSO and send its members to the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia (ICTY) for war crimes trials. Other sources say that the assassination was motivated primarily by fears of a crackdown on organized crime.

---

<sup>1</sup> For detailed accounts of the events leading up to Milosevic's fall, see Steven Erlanger and Roger Cohen, "How Yugoslavia Won its Fight For Freedom," New York Times, October 15, 2000, 1; and R. Jeffrey Smith, "How Milosevic Lost His Grip," Washington Post, October 14, 2000, 1.

In the wake of the murder, Serbian police arrested thousands of persons suspected of links with organized crime. Legija escaped arrest until May 2004, when he turned himself in to Serbian police. The trial of Djindjic's killers opened in Belgrade in December 2003. Observers hoped that the assassination would trigger a clean-up of organized crime and high-level corruption in Serbia. However, in a March 2004 report, the International Crisis Group, a respected international think-tank, said that close ties between top government officials, officers in the military and security agencies, organized crime figures, and former Milosevic cronies, continue to exist, and pose a key stumbling block to reform.<sup>2</sup>

Current Political Situation in Serbia

The increasingly instability of the ruling DOS coalition led the Serbian government to call early parliamentary elections on December 28, 2003. The results reflected public disillusionment with the performance of the previous government and resurgent nationalism in Serbia. By far the largest party in the 250-seat parliament is the Serbian Radical Party, which won 82 seats. Milosevic's Socialist Party of Serbia won 22 seats. Democratically-oriented parties won the remaining seats. Kostunica's Democratic Party of Serbia (DSS) won 53 seats, the Democratic Party won 37 seats, and the G-17 Plus party won 34 seats. The monarchist and moderate nationalist Serbian Renewal Movement, in coalition with the New Serbia party, won 22 seats.

After two months of sometimes bitter wrangling, Kostunica assembled a minority government of democratic parties, consisting of the DSS, G17 Plus, and the SPO/NS. The DSS received the interior and justice ministry posts, which are key in the fight against organized crime and corruption. G17 Plus plays an important role in economic affairs. Its leader, Miroljub Labus, is Deputy Prime Minister, and Mladjan Dinkic is Finance Minister. The parliament approved the new Serbian government on March 3, 2004. There have also been changes in the joint Serbia and Montenegro government. The new Foreign Minister is Vuk Draskovic, leader of the SPO. The new defense minister is Prvoslav Davinic.

The most controversial aspect of the new government is its dependence on support from the SPS, which does not have ministers in the government but provides it with a majority in parliament. During initial post-election discussions in January, representatives of Serbia's democratic parties and U.S. officials expected that the DSS, G17, and SPO/NS would form a majority government of democratic parties with the DS, or at least a minority government with the support of the DS.<sup>3</sup> However, bitter recriminations between DSS and DS leaders, some of which Kostunica believed to be tainted with corruption, led to the collapse of these efforts. In justifying his overtures to the Socialists, Kostunica asserted that they have reformed themselves since they were in power under Milosevic, a claim that many analysts would dispute.

---

<sup>2</sup> International Crisis Group, Serbia's U-Turn, March 26, 2004, available on the ICG website at [<http://www.crisisweb.org>].

On June 12, 2004, Serbia will hold a presidential election. Although the Serbian presidency is not a powerful post, analysts view the election as a key indication of Serbia's democratic development. A victory for the candidate of the extreme nationalist Radical Party, Tomislav Nikolic, would be viewed as a serious setback for Serbia's path toward integration with Western institutions. Nikolic is opposed by Democratic Party leader Dusan Tadic and Dragan Marsicanin of the DSS. As no candidate is expected to win a majority in the first round of voting, the winner is likely to be decided in a runoff between Nikolic and either Tadic or Marsicanin. A failure to unite and energize democratic voters for the second round could result in a Nikolic victory. However, the campaign has been marked by disputes between the DS and the DSS, including over responsibility for the killing of Djindjic. A Nikolic victory could lead to new parliamentary elections in Serbia, possibly resulting in a further gain in the Radicals' power. Conversely, a victory by Tadic could lead to the DS's entry into the government and the consolidation of Serbia's democratic forces.

Major Political Parties and Groups in Serbia

Democratic Party (DS): The DS was the largest party in the 2001-2003 democratic coalition government. It established a reputation for pro-Western pragmatism under its former leader, Prime Minister Zoran Djindjic. This reputation has also hurt the party among some Serbs, who have seen it as opportunistic, riddled with corruption, and too eager to appease the West. Djindjic was assassinated in March 2003 by organized crime figures associated with the former Milosevic regime. It suffered a substantial decline in support in the December 2003 elections, but remains the largest democratic party in parliament, after the DSS. Its leader is former Defense Minister Dusan Tadic.

Democratic Party of Serbia (DSS): After the December 2003 elections, the DSS became largest party among the democratic forces in Serbia. The DSS is led by Vojislav Kostunica, formerly Yugoslav President. Like other democratic parties, the DSS favors democracy, the rule of law (a particular interest of Kostunica's), and free market reform, but has a markedly nationalist orientation. It was highly critical of the decision to transfer Milosevic to war crimes tribunal in June 2001, and soon left the previous government. It plays the leading role in the current Serbian government, established in March 2004.

G-17 Plus: Formerly a non-partisan economic reform group, G-17 Plus registered as a political party in early 2003. It won 34 seats in the December 28, 2003 parliamentary elections. It is perhaps the most pro-Western and pro-economic reform force in the parliament and holds key posts in the government dealing with the economy.

Serbian Radical Party (SRS): An extreme nationalist party, led by Vojislav Seselj, who is now facing war crimes charges at Yugoslav war crimes tribunal in The Hague.

<sup>3</sup> Discussions with U.S. officials and Serbian political leaders, January 2004.

Although ostensibly anti-Communist, the SRS held posts in the Milosevic regime, which cost the SRS dearly in the 2000 elections. However, the SRS surged in popularity as the pro-Western and pro-reform government's fortunes waned. The SRS condemned cooperation with the war crimes tribunal, government corruption scandals, and poor living standards, and slightly moderated its warlike, anti-Western rhetoric. The SRS won a spectacular victory in the December 2003 elections, becoming by far the largest party in the Serbian parliament.

Serbian Renewal Movement (SPO)/New Serbia: The SPO is a democratically-oriented, nationalist, pro-monarchist party, led by Vuk Draskovic, who has had a reputation for political unpredictability. It formed an electoral coalition with a smaller group called New Serbia.

Socialist Party of Serbia (SPS): The SPS is the successor to the Serbian branch of the Yugoslav Communist party. Under the leadership of Slobodan Milosevic, the party used nationalism to dominate Serbian politics from the late 1980s until its defeat in the 2000 elections. The SPS was further weakened by Milosevic's transfer to the Yugoslav war crimes tribunal in June 2001. Its influence continues to decline, but it remains a significant force in Serbian politics. The SPS won 22 seats in the December 2003 elections, even fewer than in 2000. It is not in the government, but its support is crucial for the government to have a majority in parliament.

Political Situation in Montenegro

Since 1997, Montenegro has been controlled by an anti-Milosevic faction of the local Socialist Party led by Milo Djukanovic. In October 1997, Djukanovic was elected President of Montenegro. As Djukanovic consolidated his grip on power in Montenegro, a cold war developed between Montenegrin leaders and the Milosevic regime. Milosevic did not allow Montenegro to participate in setting federal policies. For his part, Djukanovic moved to seize control of virtually all of the levers of power in Montenegro, except for air traffic control and the Yugoslav army contingent in the republic. Djukanovic successfully sought relief from Western sanctions against the FRY and received Western aid to boost Montenegro's economy.

After Milosevic's fall, efforts by Montenegrin leaders to push forward with independence from Yugoslavia were stalled by intense international pressure, particularly from the European Union. In addition to their concerns about the impact Montenegrin independence might have on the situation in Serbia and Montenegro, EU officials are also concerned that the collapse of Yugoslavia could hurt the chances of keeping Kosovo as part of the Serbia and Montenegro union.

On March 14, 2002, EU foreign policy chief Javier Solana brokered an agreement between Serbia and Montenegro on restructuring the relationship between the two republics. The FRY would be formally abolished and the country would be renamed "Serbia and Montenegro." A "union of states" would have a popularly elected parliament, a president chosen by the parliament, and a government. It would deal with foreign affairs, defense, international economic relations, economic relations between the republics, and the protection of human and minority rights. The two republics would attempt to reform and harmonize their economies in line with EU standards. The agreement would allow either state to declare independence after three years. The agreement asserts that Serbia would inherit the FRY's sovereignty over Kosovo as laid out in U.N. Security Council 1244. In February 2003, the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia was formally dissolved and "Serbia and Montenegro" came into being as the new joint state.<sup>4</sup>

The Montenegrin government collapsed in April 2002, when two pro-independence parties, the Social Democratic Party and the Liberal Alliance, condemned the agreement and withdrew their support. In July 2002, the Liberals made an surprising political move by allying themselves with the anti-independence, formerly pro-Milosevic SNP to form a government with a one-vote majority, ousting the Djukanovic's Democratic Party of Socialists (DPS). The new coalition partners were criticized by some of their supporters as having sacrificed their principles in order to gain power. They were criticized by the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe when they passed legislation to restrict media freedoms and change election laws.

Major Political Parties in Montenegro

Democratic Party of Socialists (DPS): The largest party in Montenegro, the DPS is the successor to the Montenegrin sister party of the Socialist Party of Serbia. In 1997, Milo Djukanovic, its leader, broke with Milosevic, taking most of the party with him. Although comprised of former Communists, the DPS espouses support democracy, free market reform and closer ties with the West.

Liberal Alliance of Montenegro: A small opposition political group that strongly supports Montenegrin independence, political and economic reform, and a pro-Western foreign policy. It criticizes the DPS for its Communist past, its lack of commitment to a truly democratic Montenegro, and charges that it has manipulated the economy for the personal gain of Djukanovic and his cronies.

People's Party of Montenegro (PP): Like the DPS, the PP favors political and economic reform and closer ties with the West. However, it is more strongly in favor with closer ties with Serbia than the DPS. The PP was a member of the governing coalition with the DPS until December 2001, when it quit the government in protest against a DPS plan for Montenegro's independence.

Social Democratic Party (SDP): A center-left party that shares similar domestic and foreign policy goals with the DPS. It strongly favors independence.

Socialist People's Party (SNP): The SNP was formed from the minority faction of the former Yugoslav communist party in Montenegro that remained loyal to Milosevic. It strongly favors close ties with Serbia and opposes independence.

On October 20, 2002, Montenegro held parliamentary elections. The DPS and Djukanovic made an impressive political comeback. A DPS-led coalition won an absolute majority of 39 of the 75 seats in the parliament. An SNP-led bloc won 30 seats, and the Liberals won 4. Presidential elections were scheduled for December

---

<sup>4</sup> For more on the Serbia and Montenegro union, see CRS Report RS21568, Serbia and Montenegro Union: Prospects and Policy Implications, July 11, 2003.

22, 2002. Fearing an opposition boycott which could depress turnout and therefore invalidate the vote, Djukanovic resigned as President on November 26, 2002 and was elected to the post of Prime Minister by the parliament. Djukanovic's concerns about the presidential vote proved correct when the results of the December 22 vote were invalidated due to low turnout. After a repeat presidential election failed for the same reason in February 2003, former Prime Minister and Djukanovic supporter Filip Vujanovic was elected as President when a third election was held in May 2003.

Observers have noted that Montenegro is a small republic with few industries and resources, and is highly dependent on trade and, allegedly, smuggling. Since coming to power, Djukanovic and other Montenegrin leaders been accused of complicity with smuggling operations and organized crime activities, sometimes in cooperation with the Italian Mafia figures. Italian police say they are investigating Djukanovic's possible role in a long-standing cigarette-smuggling operation. Montenegrin leaders claim these charges of criminal conduct by top-ranking officials have been fabricated by domestic opponents and some European countries to undermine Montenegrin efforts to secure independence.

In November 2002, a Moldovan woman charged that she was kept in a Montenegrin brothel and abused by top Montenegrin officials. A Montenegrin deputy prosecutor was arrested on sex trafficking charges. A Montenegrin court later threw out the charges, claiming the woman's testimony was insufficient to warrant a trial. U.S. officials expressed disappointment with the decision. Montenegro's chief prosecutor stepped down in July 2003, amid the scandals. In September 2003, a group of independent experts, appointed by Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe and the Council of Europe, issued a confidential report on the sex trafficking claims. The Montenegrin government has said it will implement the suggestions made in the report to strengthen Montenegro's efforts in the fight against trafficking, as well as to "completely clarify" the case of the Moldovan woman. In June 2004, the government established a national coordinator to fight human trafficking.

The EU's firm insistence that Montenegro will only be permitted to join the EU as part of a more closely integrated union with Serbia remains a stumbling block to pro-independence forces in Montenegro. Djukanovic nevertheless has said an independence referendum could occur as soon as spring 2005, when he claims the independence moratorium expires. Others, noting the Serbia and Montenegro union constitution was approved in 2003, put the date for the earliest referendum a year later, in 2006. Some observers say that such a referendum could be risky for the government, given its declining popularity in public opinion polls and the at best wafer-thin majority for independence among people in Montenegro.

Kosovo and Southern Serbia

Kosovo was an autonomous province within Serbia until 1990, when its autonomy was eliminated by Milosevic. The move provoked the province's ethnic Albanian majority to non-violent resistance then, by 1998, armed revolt by the Kosovo Liberation Army. In order to put a halt to the conflict (including atrocities by Serbian forces) and restore the province's autonomy, the United States and other NATO countries launched a campaign of air strikes against Serbia between March and June 1999. In June 1999, Milosevic agreed to withdraw his forces from Kosovo, permitting a NATO-led peacekeeping force to be deployed. Under the terms of U.N. Security Council Resolution 1244, Kosovo is governed by a U.N. Mission in Kosovo (UNMIK), until an autonomous Kosovo government can run the province itself. UNSC 1244 does not say what Kosovo's final status should be, but supports the territorial integrity of the FRY.<sup>5</sup> Direct dialogue between Belgrade and the Kosovo government began in October 2003 but has achieved few results so far.

Serbia's democratic leaders say they support implementation of UNSC 1244. They strongly oppose independence for Kosovo, an outcome favored by virtually all ethnic Albanians, who make up over 90% of the population of the province. Serbian leaders have expressed frustration at the inability of the U.N. Mission in Kosovo (UNMIK) and KFOR, the NATO-led peacekeeping force in the province, to provide conditions for the return of Serb refugees to their homes and for Serbs remaining in the province to have a normal life. These frustrations were underlined by sweeping anti-Serb riots in Kosovo in March 2004, when 19 Serbs were killed, over 900 injured, 4,500 Serbs were driven from their homes, and many Serb homes and other property were destroyed. KFOR, UNMIK, and local police largely proved unwilling or incapable of stopping the rioters.

In April 2004, the Serbian parliament approved a "decentralization" plan for Kosovo. The plan would set up autonomous Serb regions in northern Kosovo, similar in some ways to the current division of Bosnia into "entities" under weak central control. Under the proposal, Serbian-majority areas in Kosovo would be controlled by local Serb authorities, with their own police. Ethnic Albanian authorities would control the rest of the province, although Serbs in those areas would have personal and cultural autonomy, and Kosovo as a whole would remain part of Serbia. Such a plan would have the benefit, from Belgrade's point of view, of consolidating its control over northern Kosovo, where most Serbs in the province now live, and where important economic assets, such as the Trepca mining complex, are found. Ethnic Albanian leaders strongly oppose the idea for these very reasons. International officials, although more sympathetic to the concept of decentralization since the March 2004 anti-Serb riots, fear such plans could lead to the eventual partition of the province along ethnic lines, which could in turn spark renewed violence over disputed areas. They also believe it could set a bad example for the region, resulting in renewed calls to partition Bosnia, southern Serbia, and Macedonia.<sup>6</sup> International officials and ethnic Albanians have criticized Serbia for continuing to support "parallel structures" that cement its control over Serb-majority areas at the expense of UNMIK's authority.

The issue of Kosovo's status may have become more complicated due to the dissolution of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and the establishment of a much looser relationship between Serbia and Montenegro in February 2003. The charter establishing the new union describes Kosovo as part of Serbia, a provision that has been denounced by Kosovar Albanians. Kosovar Albanians claim that since the FRY no longer exists, Kosovo can no longer be considered part of it according to UNSC Resolution 1244, and will be free to choose (via a referendum) independence. On the other hand, Serbia claims that the deal between Serbia and Montenegro, which was heavily promoted by representatives of the international community, was intended to forestall the further disintegration of states and regions in the former Yugoslavia, and demonstrated international opposition to Kosovo's independence.

---

<sup>5</sup> For more on Kosovo, see CRS Report RL31053, Kosovo and U.S. Policy, by Steven Woehrel and Julie Kim.

<sup>6</sup> International War and Peace Reporting, Balkan Crisis Report, no. 405, February 10, 2003.

With the help of the international community, Serbia has had success in defusing an insurgency in the Presevo valley region, ethnic-Albanian inhabited areas of southern Serbia comprising the municipalities of Presevo, Medvedja and Bujanovac. In March-May 2001, NATO troops in Kosovo permitted the phased reintroduction of Yugoslav forces into a demilitarized zone bordering Kosovo that ethnic Albanian guerrillas had used as a springboard for attacks on Serbian territory. Under pressure from the international community, the guerrillas disbanded in May 2001. Western countries pressed Serbia to seek a peaceful settlement to the conflict by dealing with some of its underlying causes, including the ethnic balance of local police and the economic situation in the area.

In February 2001, Serbian Deputy Prime Minister Nebojsa Covic put forward a peace plan for the region. The plan called for boosting the participation of ethnic Albanians in local government and police, with help from the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe. Local elections were held in July 2002 in the region. Ethnic Albanian parties now control the local governments of Presevo and Bujanovac, while Serb groups control Medvedja. However, the problems in the area are not completely solved. Some ethnic Albanians complain of discrimination, and sporadic attacks continue on Serbian troops. In response to a boycott call by local ethnic Albanian leaders, almost no ethnic Albanians voted in the Serbian parliamentary elections in December 2003. Local leaders said that the Serbian election law made no provision for setting aside seats for ethnic minorities who cannot meet the requirement of winning 5% of the vote to enter the parliament.

Economic Situation

The democratic leadership in Belgrade faced daunting economic challenges when it took over from the Milosevic regime in 2000. The FRY's economy suffered from years of economic mismanagement, economic isolation and the lingering effects of NATO air strikes in 1999. Many key enterprises and banks were controlled by regime cronies who managed them poorly and stole large sums from them. According to FRY officials, Serbia's Gross Domestic Product (GDP) in 1999 was only 45% of its 1990 level. Unemployment was about 35% in 2000. Conflicts in the former Yugoslavia left the FRY with over 800,000 refugees and displaced persons to care for, or about 10% of the country's population. In the final year of his rule, Milosevic increased the money supply in order to fund reconstruction projects after the Kosovo war, fueling inflation and the depreciation of the dinar, Serbia's currency. The inflation rate for 2000 was 70%. The country suffered from high levels of internal and external indebtedness. Budget deficits at all levels of government, including pension and other social welfare arrears, amounted to 8-10% of GDP. There was a tangle of bad bank debts and interenterprise arrears, amounting to 80% of GDP. There was also an external debt of $11.6 billion, or about 140% of GDP.<sup>7</sup>

In 2001, the new FRY and Serbian governments embarked on a comprehensive economic reform program. They conducted prudent fiscal and monetary policies that have reduced inflation. Price controls have also been eased. They made some cuts in public spending, particularly in funding for police and military forces. The fiscal and budgetary systems are being overhauled to make them fairer and more transparent. The country's foreign trade regime has been liberalized. Reform of the banking sector has begun. A law on foreign direct investment was passed, and Serbia has moved quickly to privatize "socially-owned" firms. Foreign direct investment remains low, but increased substantially in 2003, even after Djindjic's murder. One recent deal involved the sale of the Sartid steel works to U.S. Steel in September 2003. By the end of 2003, the Serbian government had sold off many of the most attractive firms slated for privatization. However, many Serbian firms, including many of those not yet privatized, will have to undergo painful structural changes in order to become efficient. Others will go bankrupt.

These reform policies have had mixed results so far. Gross Domestic Product rose by 5.5% in 2001, 4.0% in 2002, and 2% in 2003. Most of the increase in GDP has been due to growth in the service sector, including retail trade. Industrial production has been slower to recover. Consumer price inflation has been sharply reduced; it stood at 7.8% at the end of 2003. However, unemployment remains very high, over 30% in 2003. As large companies are restructured, more people could lose their jobs, although the government has sought to stimulate the growth of small and medium enterprises. Average real monthly wages have increased from about 50 Euros in 2000 to 164 Euros in 2003.<sup>8</sup> However, poverty remains a problem. A recent World Bank estimate put 10% of the population of Serbia and Montenegro under the poverty line, defined as 60 Euros (about $73) a month.

Serbia and Montenegro's economic policies have been supported by the International Monetary Fund and other international financial institutions. In May 2002, the IMF extended a three-year, $889 million loan to Serbia and Montenegro, after disbursing the final part of a $249 million standby loan offered in 2001. In March 2004, the IMF praised Serbia and Montenegro's fiscal and monetary policies, as well as the rapid pace of privatization, but said the country should cut its large current account deficit (15% of GDP in 2003), continue to moderate its budget deficit, and move forward on enterprise restructuring and banking reform, especially laws on bankruptcy and energy. Serbia and Montenegro's foreign debt has continued to climb, hitting $13.48 billion in 2003. A 2002 Paris Club debt forgiveness deal has reduced some of the pressure on the country's finances, although a London Club deal has yet to be reached.<sup>9</sup>

---

<sup>7</sup> Paper presented by FRY Deputy Prime Minister Miroljub Labus at December 12, 2000, donor coordination conference, available from the EU/World Bank website at [<http://www.seerecon.org>].

<sup>8</sup> Testimony of Deputy Assistance Secretary of State D. Kathleen Stephens before the House International Relations Committee, Subcommittee on Europe, March 17, 2004.

The new Serbian government that took office in March 2004 has pledged to continue economic reforms. However, they have expressed concerns about possible corruption in the previous government's privatization program and are reviewing several sales. In its 2004 budget, the new government proposed to expand spending on public infrastructure and agriculture.

Under Djukanovic, Montenegro pursued a separate economic policy from Serbia. It made more progress on privatization than Serbia under Milosevic, and its switch to the Deutschmark (and later the Euro) limited the damage of Milosevic's lax monetary policies. However, the republic's few industries need extensive restructuring, and its economy is heavily dependent on trade with Serbia and foreign countries. Moreover, some have complained about corruption in the privatization process. Under pressure from the EU, the two republics are harmonizing their customs tariffs. Montenegro has agreed to raise some tariffs, despite its dependence on trade. Serbia, with farmers and large industries to protect, has higher tariffs, and agreed to lower them.

International Response

European Union

Eventual membership in the European Union is a key objective of the foreign policy of Serbia and Montenegro. The EU has committed itself to admitting Serbia and Montenegro when it is ready. However, the path to membership may be a long and difficult one. Serbia and Montenegro hopes to begin negotiations soon with the European Union on a Stabilization and Association Agreement (SAA). The agreement would provide a framework for enhanced cooperation between the EU and Serbia and Montenegro in a variety of fields, including the harmonization of local laws with EU standards, with the perspective of EU membership. While the European Union has not conditioned its aid to Serbia on war crimes cooperation, EU officials have made clear to Serbian leaders that a closer relationship with the EU, including the SAA, requires Serbian cooperation with the ICTY. Other conditions include progress in political and economic reforms, and the effective functioning of the state union of Serbia and Montenegro. On December 1, 2001, the FRY was granted preferential trading status with the EU. EU aid for Serbia in 2004 is expected to be 195 million Euro, and an additional 15 million is allotted for Montenegro.<sup>10</sup>

---

<sup>9</sup> Global Insight report on Serbia and Montenegro [<http://www.globalinsight.com>], April 2004 and documents from the Donor Coordination Meeting for Serbia and Montenegro, November 18, 2003, which can be found at [<http://www.seerecon.org>], and "IMF Mission Statement on Discussions in Serbia and Montenegro, IMF press release, March 29, 2004, at the IMF website [<http://www.imf.org>].

<sup>10</sup> EU Commission, "Federal Republic of Yugoslavia: Country Strategy Paper, 2002-2006," (continued...)

The European Union strongly opposes Montenegrin independence. EU leaders fear that it would work against greater integration in the region as a whole, possibly strengthening separatist forces in Bosnia, Kosovo, and Macedonia. EU foreign policy chief Javier Solana brokered the March 2002 agreement to set up the current union of Serbia and Montenegro. Although the agreement permits either republic to leave the union within three years, EU officials have pressed the two republics to stay together and to more closely align their economic policies, warning that such integration will be necessary if Serbia and Montenegro wish to secure an SAA in the near future or join the European Union in the longer term.

NATO

On June 19, 2003, Serbia and Montenegro made a formal request to join NATO's Partnership for Peace (PFP) program. The United States and NATO have set several conditions for Serbia and Montenegro's membership in PFP, including cooperation with the ICTY (especially the transfer of Mladic to the Tribunal); better civilian control over the military and security services; and an end to illegal ties with the Republika Srpska army. Serbia and Montenegro will also have to drop its lawsuit in the International Court of Justice against NATO for its air strike campaign against Serbia in 1999. Leaders in Serbia and Montenegro say they want to join PFP in order to secure Western aid and advice in reforming their armed forces, including the establishment of full civilian control.

In 2003, Serbia and Montenegro took the first steps to reform its armed forces, including by putting the General Staff and intelligence and security agencies under the control of the civilian Minister of Defense. Hundreds of high-ranking officers from the Milosevic era were retired or dismissed. Proposed changes include redrafting defense and national security strategies, and restructuring and reducing the size of the armed forces along lines suggested for NATO candidate states. However, U.S. officials have said that Serbia and Montenegro's prospects for joining PFP at the June 2004 NATO summit will be dim unless it dramatically improves its cooperation with the ICTY, including the transfer of Mladic to the Tribunal. Serbia and Montenegro does not have troops deployed to Iraq as part of the U.S.-led coalition there or in Afghanistan. Work on a 2003 proposal by Serbia and Montenegro to deploy forces to Afghanistan was suspended due to the parliamentary elections in Serbia and has yet to be revived.

U.S. Policy

In its policy toward Serbia and Montenegro, the Administration has tried to support the country's democratic transition and integration into Euro-Atlantic institutions. However, the United States has continued to insist that Belgrade meet its international obligations, including to the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia (ICTY). The Administration has advocated Serbia and from EU External Relations website, [http://europa.eu.int/comm/external\_relations/see/fry/serbia/index.htm].

---

<sup>10</sup> (...continued)

Montenegro's membership in NATO's Partnership for Peace, if it meets these obligations and establishes civilian control over its military and security services. On May 7, 2003, President Bush signed a presidential determination that permits Serbia and Montenegro to receive U.S. defense articles, services, and assistance. Bush Administration officials have said that they do not favor independence for Montenegro. They supported the agreement on the restructuring of the relationship between Serbia and Montenegro and praised the EU for bringing it about.

On December 29, 2003, a State Department spokesman welcomed Serbia's "orderly" elections and urged Serbia's leaders to form a new government to continue reforms begun by the DOS government, as well as to support the Dayton Peace Accords in Bosnia and cooperate with the war crimes tribunal.

Cooperation with the War Crimes Tribunal

The fate of Milosevic and other persons indicted by ICTY has been a controversial issue in Serbia's relations with the United States. Milosevic and four other top leaders of his regime were indicted by the ICTY on May 15, 1999 for war crimes committed by Yugoslav army and Serbian police forces in Kosovo. ICTY prosecutor Carla Del Ponte has brought additional indictments against Milosevic for genocide for his role in the wars in Croatia and Bosnia-Herzegovina.

In each of the past four fiscal years (FY2001-FY2004), Congress has conditioned U.S. aid to Serbia after a certain date of that year (usually March 31) on a presidential certification that Serbia has met certain conditions, especially cooperation with the ICTY. The provisions also recommended that U.S. support for loans to the FRY be conditioned on the certification. U.S. conditions on aid to Serbia may have had a significant impact on Serbian cooperation with the Tribunal. Since the coming to power of Serbian democrats in late 2000, Serbian cooperation with the ICTY has followed a similar pattern each year: Serbia delivers several indictees to the Tribunal just before or, at most, a few weeks after the certification deadline. The Administration makes the certification as required by the legislation, and urges Serbia to do more. However, Serbian cooperation then slows, with Serbian leaders claiming that political and legal obstacles preclude greater efforts. Nevertheless, more indictees are delivered as the next deadline for certification approaches, and so on.

This pattern has been broken in FY2004, at least so far. Due to the Serbian government's lack of cooperation with the Tribunal, the Administration did not issue the certification by the March 31 deadline, and therefore a portion of FY2004 aid to Serbia (estimated by Administration officials at about $25 million) has been suspended until Serbia's cooperation with the ICTY improves.

In May 2004, Judge Thomas Meron, President of the ICTY, formally reported Serbia and Montenegro's non-cooperation with the ICTY to the U.N. Security Council. In the letter, Meron refers to an accompanying report by ICTY Chief Prosecutor Del Ponte criticized Belgrade's cooperation with the Tribunal as "nearly non-existent," and noting the level of cooperation from Serbia had declined after the December 2003 Serbian parliamentary elections. Del Ponte said she continues to face serious problems on such issues as the arrest and transfer of fugitives, access to key documents, and permission to interview high-level Serbian witnesses. U.S. officials estimate that as many as 16 ICTY indictees spend most of their time in Serbia, including former Bosnian Serb army chief Ratko Mladic.

Serbia is attempting to demonstrate that it is capable of prosecuting war criminals itself. In the past year, a handful of low-level Serbian war criminals have been tried and convicted in Serbian courts. In July 2003, Serbia named its own war crimes prosecutor. It remains to be seen, however, whether the prosecutor will have the power and political will to bring charges against suspected war criminals among current and former high-ranking security and military officials.<sup>11</sup> The Administration has assisted this effort, favoring shifting responsibility for prosecuting major war crimes cases from the ICTY to Serbian courts. However, Del Ponte and others have expressed skepticism that Serbia has the political will or the judicial capacity to take on the task in the near future. The United States, along with other countries, successfully pushed for the adoption of U.N. Security Council Resolution 1503 in August 2003. The resolution calls for ICTY to complete its investigations by 2004, its trials by 2008 and all appeals by 2010.

Administration officials have suggested that if Ratko Mladic were turned over to the Tribunal, it would create a new, more positive environment in cooperation with the ICTY that could result in the remaining Serbian indictees being tried in Serbian courts.<sup>12</sup> The United States is assisting Serbia's efforts to prosecute war criminals itself by providing assistance in such areas as helping to set up witness protection programs, providing training to judges and contributing funds to help establish a new Serbian court to try organized crime and war crimes cases.

Serbia and Montenegro and the International Criminal Court

On July 1, 2003, the United States terminated military assistance to Serbia and Montenegro and 34 other countries that are parties to the International Criminal Court (ICC) and have not signed agreements exempting U.S. citizens on their soil from transfer to the ICC for prosecution.<sup>13</sup> Serbia and Montenegro authorities decided to postpone a final decision on whether to sign such an agreement (termed an "Article 98" agreement in reference to the Rome Statute that established the ICC) with the United States. Like other countries in the region, Belgrade does not want to offend the world's sole superpower. On the other hand, Serbia and Montenegro also wants to stay on good terms with the EU, its main economic partner and source of aid, which has strongly urged prospective new member states in central and east European countries not to sign exemption agreements with the United States on the grounds that they would undermine the ICC. Serbian officials noted that it would be difficult to explain to the Serbian public why the government would agree to exempt

---

<sup>11</sup> For more on Serbian ICTY cooperation and U.S. aid conditions, see Conditions on U.S. Aid to Serbia, CRS Report RS21686, by Steven Woehrel.

<sup>12</sup> Discussions with Administration officials, November 2003.

<sup>13</sup> Pursuant to Section 2007 of the American Servicemembers' Protection Act (ASPA; title II of P.L. 107-206, the FY2002 supplemental appropriation act).

U.S. citizens from extradition while the United States insists that Belgrade arrest and extradite its own citizens to the ICTY.<sup>14</sup>

U.S. Aid

Due to U.S. and international sanctions on the FRY, the United States provided little aid to Serbia and Montenegro before FY1999. From FY1999 through FY2001, the United States obligated $136.8 million in aid to Serbia and $137.9 million in aid to Montenegro. An additional $133.5 million was allocated to the FRY as a whole for the same period.<sup>15</sup> The Administration provided $106.7 million in SEED funding for Serbia in FY2002 and $60 million for Montenegro. The Administration allocated $110 million for Serbia for FY2003 and $25 million for Montenegro. It has budgeted $95 million in aid for Serbia in FY2004 and $18 million for Montenegro. In FY2005, the Administration has requested $87 million in SEED aid for Serbia and $15 million for Montenegro. SEED aid is being used to help Serbia and Montenegro establish a free market economy. U.S. aid provides advice on restructuring the banking sector, privatization, tax reform, WTO accession, fighting financial crime, and providing credit facilities to help small business and develop a mortgage market. Other SEED aid is aimed at strengthening democratic institutions and civil society in the two republics, including by supporting the development of effective local governments.<sup>16</sup> Other U.S. aid is targeted at strengthening Serbia and Montenegro's exports and border controls.

Congressional Response

During Milosevic's reign, congressional action on the FRY focused on codifying and tightening sanctions against Serbia and denying it most aid, while providing significant assistance to Montenegro and some democratization assistance for Serbia. As in previous years, the House and Senate-passed versions of the FY2001 foreign operations appropriations bills included provisions that would have implemented these objectives. However, Milosevic's removal from power intervened during conference deliberations on the bill (H.R. 4811). The measure, signed by the President on November 6, 2000 (P.L. 106-429), provided $600 million for central and eastern Europe in Support for East European Democracy Act (SEED) funds. An additional $75.825 million in emergency supplemental funding was earmarked for Serbia, Montenegro and Croatia combined.

From the funds in the bill, the Administration was permitted to provide up to $100 million for Serbia. The bill did not include an earmark for Montenegro, but the conference report says that Montenegro "should" receive $89 million. Section 594 of the measure added the condition that no funds from the bill can be made available for Serbia after March 31, 2001 unless the President certifies that Serbia is "(1)

---

<sup>14</sup> Beta news agency via the British Broadcasting Corporation, July 20, 2003. It should be noted, however, that the ICTY has no institutional relationship to the ICC.

<sup>15</sup> USAID, U.S. Overseas Loans and Grants, July 1, 1945-September 30, 2001.

<sup>16</sup> USAID Budget Justification to the Congress, Fiscal Year 2005, Annex III Europe and Eurasia.

cooperating with the International Criminal Tribunal for Yugoslavia including access for investigators, the provision of documents, and the surrender and transfer of indictees or assistance in their apprehension; (2) taking steps that are consistent with the Dayton Accords to end Serbian financial, political, security and other support which has served to maintain separate Republika Srpska institutions; and (3) taking steps to implement policies which reflect a respect for minority rights and the rule of law.”

The law said that the United States should support the membership of the FRY to regional and international organizations subject to a certification by the President that the FRY has applied for membership on the same basis of other former Yugoslav republics, and has taken steps to settle issues related to state liabilities, assets and property. It also said that after March 31, 2001, the United States should instruct its representatives to international financial institutions to support loans to the FRY subject to the conditions in the Presidential certification on aid to outlined above (Section 594). The section did not apply to Kosovo, Montenegro, humanitarian aid or assistance to promote democracy in municipalities.

Another section of the law also prohibited any aid to countries that harbor war criminals, although this provision could be waived by the Secretary of State if he provides a determination to Congress that such aid supports the implementation of the Bosnian peace accords (Section 563).

Members of Congress hailed the transfer of Milosevic to the ICTY on June 28, 2001. On June 29, Senators McConnell and Leahy introduced S.Res. 122. The resolution praised Prime Minister Djindjic and other Serbian leaders for their “courage” in transferring Milosevic and called on them to continue to transfer indictees to the ICTY and to release all political prisoners from Serbian jails. It expressed the sense of the Senate that the United States should continue to provide aid to the FRY to support economic, political and legal reforms there. The resolution was adopted by unanimous consent on July 18, 2001.

FY2002 foreign appropriations legislation (P.L. 107-115) contained the same conditions on aid to Serbia as in FY2001. The Administration made the certification on May 21, 2002. Secretary of State Colin Powell pointed to the passage of the war crimes cooperation law and the surrender of several indictees over the previous few weeks, as well as the release of ethnic Albanian prisoners from Serbia in March 2002 as justification for the move. Secretary Powell also said that, in the wake of the certification, the Administration favored working with Congress to restore Normal Trade Relations (NTR) status for the FRY.

The FY2003 foreign aid appropriations measure was included as part of the Consolidated Appropriations Resolution for FY2003 (P.L. 108-7). The bill contained certification provisions on aid to Serbia similar to the FY2001 and FY2002 bills, and required the President to make the certification by June 15, 2003. Secretary of State Powell made the certification on June 15, but noted that Serbia and Montenegro still need to give their full cooperation to the ICTY, including the transfer of Mladic and Karadzic.

On March 5, 2003, the House passed H.R. 1047, which, among other provisions, would permit the President to restore Normal Trade Relations (NTR) status to Serbia and Montenegro, notwithstanding the provisions of P.L. 102-420. P.L. 102-420 imposed conditions on restoring NTR to the FRY, including a Presidential certification that the FRY had ceased armed conflict with other peoples of the former Yugoslavia, agreed to respect the borders of the former Yugoslav states, and ended support to Bosnian Serb forces. In 2002, the House passed a similar measure in H.R. 5385, but the Senate did not consider a companion version before the adjournment of the 107th Congress.

The House passed H.Res. 149 on April 9, 2003. The resolution offered condolences to the people of Serbia and the family of Zoran Djindjic; noted that implementing reforms and cooperating with the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia must continue despite the “significant risks” they pose for the leadership of Serbia and Montenegro; and that the United States should continue to support the reforms started by Djindjic, including the fight against organized crime and corruption.

On November 4, 2003, the Administration restored Serbia and Montenegro’s Normal Trade Relations (NTR) with the United States. The FRY’s NTR status was suspended in 1992, in response to its role in the war in Bosnia, according to the terms of P.L. 102-420 (106 Stat. 2149). The legislation permits the Administration to restore NTR to Serbia and Montenegro if the President certifies that the FRY had ceased armed conflict with other peoples of the former Yugoslavia, agreed to respect the borders of the former Yugoslav states, and ended support to Bosnian Serb forces. Administration officials say the move was made in response to the improved situation in Serbia, especially in defense reform and cutting links between the Serbian and Bosnian Serb armed forces. The Administration is currently considering granting duty-free treatment to some products from Serbia and Montenegro under the Generalized System of Preferences (GSP), but no decision has been taken on the issue.

The FY2004 foreign aid appropriations bill was added to an omnibus appropriations bill (H.R. 2673). The bill contains the certification process as in FY2001-FY2003, but tightens the provisions by specifically naming the transfer of Ratko Mladic as one of the steps Serbia must take to cooperate with the ICTY. The deadline for the certification was March 31, 2004. The Administration has so far declined to make the certification, resulting in the suspension of about $25 million in U.S. aid to Serbia. However, Serbia’s non-cooperation with the ICTY does not seem to have affected its access to international loans. On June 8, the IMF announced the release of a $147 million tranche of a previously approved loan to Serbia and Montenegro. The World Bank has also approved loans for Serbia and Montenegro since the March 31 deadline set by the legislation.

Adapted by CRS from Magellan Geographix.