Summary

This report summarizes principal federal disaster assistance programs for possible use by Members of Congress and staff in helping address the needs of constituents. A number of federal agencies provide assistance to victims; to state, territorial, and local governments; and to nongovernmental entities following a disaster. Among other forms of assistance, federal programs can provide grants, loans, loan guarantees, temporary housing, and counseling.

The programs summarized in this catalog fall into two broad categories. First are programs specifically for disaster situations; most of these programs are administered by the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) and the Small Business Administration (SBA). The Homeland Security Act of 2002 (P.L. 107-296) transferred FEMA to the new Department of Homeland Security. Second are general assistance programs that may be used in disaster situations, as well as to meet regular service needs. Many federal agencies, including the Departments of Health and Human Services, Housing and Urban Development, and Justice, administer programs that may be brought to bear under certain circumstances.

The programs may also be classified by recipients: primarily individuals, state and local governments, or businesses. They address such short-term needs as food and shelter, and such long-term needs as repair of public utilities.

This report will be updated as significant legislative or administrative changes occur.

Federal Disaster Recovery Programs: Brief Summaries

Introduction

Federal agencies provide a range of assistance to individual victims, state, territorial, and local governments, and nongovernmental entities after major disasters, including certain terrorist attacks. Types of aid include, but are not limited to, technical assistance, loans and loan guarantees, grants, temporary housing, access to counseling professionals, and medical assistance. The full range of federal disaster relief assistance is available after the President issues a major disaster declaration pursuant to Stafford Act authority. More limited aid is available under a Stafford Act emergency declaration or a declaration issued by a department or agency head.

Program Selection Criteria

Programs discussed in this report satisfy one or more of the following criteria:

- Congress expressly designated the program as a disaster relief or recovery program.
- The program is applicable to disaster situations, even if not specifically authorized for that purpose.
- The Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) and other federal agencies have used the program as an emergency response resource.
- The program is potentially useful for addressing short-term and long-term recovery needs (e.g., assistance with processing survivor benefits, or repair of public facilities).

The programs listed in this report are specifically authorized for disaster situations. The programs can also be classified by recipients: primarily individuals, state and local governments, or businesses. General assistance programs that may apply to disaster situations are described at the end of this report.

3 The Administrators of the Small Business Administration, Farm Services Agency, and the Secretaries of Agriculture and Transportation, within statutory limitations, may issue disaster declarations for purposes of providing assistance solely from their agencies. Citations to these authorities are presented in the relevant program summaries.
Limitations of This Report

The purpose of this report is to identify programs pertinent to the recovery process. It therefore provides brief descriptive information to help congressional offices determine which programs bear further consideration in the planning, organization, or implementation of recovery operations. Most of the programs listed here are authorized as assistance programs and listed in the Catalog of Federal Domestic Assistance (CFDA). The list does not include ad hoc assistance that some agencies provide in emergency or disaster situations.4

As Congress and the Administration respond to domestic needs, particularly should other terrorist attacks occur, some of these programs may be altered. For the most up-to-date information on a particular program, please contact the listed CRS analyst, or department or agency program officers.

Other Sources of Information

Federal Agency Websites. Many federal agencies have established websites specifically to respond to disasters. Some agencies maintain websites with comprehensive information about their disaster assistance programs, while other agencies supply only limited information; most list contact phone numbers. An A-Z Index of U.S. Government Departments and Agencies is maintained at [http://www.firstgov.gov/Agencies/Federal/All_Agencies/index.shtml].

FEMA Website. From its website, FEMA offers regular updates on recovery efforts in areas under a major disaster declaration. Information on a specific disaster may include a listing of declared counties and contact information for local residents. See [http://www.fema.gov].

Catalog of Federal Domestic Assistance. The CFDA describes some 1500 federal assistance programs (see [http://www.cfda.gov]). The catalog, however, does not contain the most current information for all programs. It also does not include information pertinent to disaster situations in most program descriptions.

Due to limitations of information available via the Internet, congressional users of this report are urged to contact the appropriate program analysts, or department or agency program officers, for more complete, timely information.

4 For example, the Army Corps of Engineers (Department of Defense) provided substantial assistance in New York City after the World Trade Center attack of 2001. The Corps assisted with installing temporary generating capacity at the twin towers rescue site in New York, provided boats for immediate evacuations of lower Manhattan, and provided engineering expertise for the rescue effort.
Federal Disaster Recovery Programs

Assistance for Individuals and Families

Individual and Household Grants. This program (IHG) is the primary vehicle for FEMA assistance to individuals after the President issues a major disaster declaration. Congress appropriates money for the IHG program to the Disaster Relief Fund. Grants are made to localities to assist disaster victims whose needs cannot be met through other forms of assistance or through other means, such as insurance. Program funds have a wide range of eligible uses, including temporary housing, funds for mortgage or rental payments, counseling services, unemployment assistance, and medical assistance. There is a statutory matching requirement that states contribute 25% of funds. Grants may not exceed $26,200, per individual or household, adjusted annually to reflect consumer price changes. (Also see Physical Disaster Loans, listed below, for additional assistance for homeowners and renters.)

Public Assistance Grants. This is FEMA’s primary assistance program for state and local governments. Public Assistance grants (PA) may be used to repair, replace, or restore disaster-damaged, publicly owned facilities and the facilities of certain private nonprofit organizations. This program has a wide range of eligible activities, including removal of debris, repair of roads and bridges, and repair of water control facilities. Congress appropriates funds to the Disaster Relief Fund. There is generally a 25% matching requirement, but the statute authorizes the President to waive part or all of the required match. (Also see Physical Disaster Loans, listed below, for assistance for nonprofit organizations.)

General Assistance Programs

In addition to programs described above, which provide targeted assistance to individuals, state, territorial, and local governments, and businesses specifically affected by disasters, numerous other general assistance programs may potentially be useful to communities in disaster situations. For example, by virtue of losing income, employment, or health insurance, individuals affected by disasters may... become eligible for programs that are not specifically intended as disaster relief, such as cash assistance under the Temporary Assistance for Needy Families (TANF) program, job training under the Workforce Investment Act, Medicaid, or the State Children’s Health Insurance Program (S-CHIP).

Likewise, state or local officials have the discretion to use funds under such programs as the Social Services Block Grant or Community Development Block Grant to meet disaster-related needs, even though these programs were not established specifically for such purposes. Other agencies that may potentially offer assistance to state and local governments include the Economic Development Administration and Army Corps of Engineers. For businesses, however, only the disaster programs administered by the Small Business Administration are generally applicable.

Numerous federal programs of potential use as disaster relief can be found throughout the government. However, specific eligibility criteria or other program rules might make it less likely that they would actually be used. Moreover, available funds might already be obligated for ongoing program activities.

On the other hand, to the extent that federal agencies have discretion in the administration of programs, some may choose to adapt these non-targeted programs for use in disaster situations. Also, Congress may choose to provide additional funds through emergency supplemental appropriations for certain general assistance programs, specifically for use after a disaster.

CRS analysts and program specialists can help provide information on the extent to which general assistance programs might be of relevance in a given disaster situation. CRS appropriations reports may have information on disaster assistance within particular federal agencies. These reports also contain a list of key policy staff at CRS (including phone numbers), identified by their program-area or agency expertise.
