Summary

The passage of the Department of Defense (DOD) authorization and appropriations bills through Congress often does not follow the course laid out in textbooks on legislative procedure. Tracking DOD authorization or appropriation bills can be confusing and time-consuming. This has been particularly true in recent years, when continuing resolutions (CRs) containing the DOD and other appropriation bills have been enacted in lieu of the 12 regular appropriations bills for the entire U.S. government.

This report is a research aid that lists the DOD authorization bills (Table 1) and appropriations bills (Table 2) for FY1970-FY2017. This report includes all the pertinent information on the passage of these bills through the legislative process: bill numbers, report numbers, dates reported and passed, recorded vote numbers and vote tallies, dates of passage of the conference reports with their numbers and votes, vetoes, substitutions, dates of final passage, and public law numbers. Significant definitions are also included. This report will be updated as legislative activity warrants.

The DOD Authorization-Appropriations Process

Congress oversees the defense budget primarily through two yearly bills: the defense authorization and defense appropriations bills. Table 1 and Table 2 present the Department of Defense (DOD) authorization and appropriations bills<sup>1</sup>. The authorization bill establishes and organizes the agencies responsible for national defense, sets policies for the department, and authorizes Congress in accordance with 10 U.S.C. § 114, to appropriate funds for certain categories of expenditures. The appropriations bill actually enables the military departments and defense agencies to draw funds from the national treasury.

Ideally, the authorization-appropriations process would proceed in an orderly sequence with each step of the process generating a part of the information trail. All of these steps would be documented in the Congressional Record as well as in many other official documents of Congress, in private publications, such as Congressional Quarterly Weekly Report and United States Code Congressional and Administrative News (USCCAN), and on the Internet at <https://www.congress.gov/>.

In the simplest case, the process begins with the President submitting his proposal (initially formulated by DOD and formally submitted by the President through the White House Office of Management and Budget) to the defense authorizing and appropriations committees.

Then, for example, for the defense authorization bill, hearings are held by the appropriate House committees and subcommittees. The bill is marked up and an authorization bill is reported out, usually with a written, numbered report. This bill is debated in the House, amended or not as the case may be, and passed by the House with the vote noted in the Congressional Record. This bill would then be sent to the Senate, debated, and passed. However, the Senate can amend the House bill or report out its own bill, debate, amend, and pass it.

If the House and Senate versions differ, the stage is set for harmonization. This may be by a conference committee appointed by the leadership of each chamber. This committee then negotiates a compromise bill that is reported to both houses. Votes on the bill are taken in both chambers. If passed it is sent to the President for his consideration and signature.

Ideally, after the authorization bill is passed, the appropriations bill goes through this same process. Although conceptually a sequential process, authorization and appropriations bills can be considered at the same time or even passed in reverse order.

Other patterns also emerge. For instance, the Senate can report out a bill, then substitute the text of the Senate bill for the text of the bill passed by the House while retaining the House bill number.<sup>2</sup> The House can also use this procedure. A Senate or House bill can also have part of the other chamber's bill inserted into it, or can be so heavily amended that it is unclear whether it is the Senate or House bill that is really being passed.

Other events can occur, to render the tracking of, a bill and its contents difficult. Bills are sometimes reported out without the reports that give context to the legislative language. Senate bills can be reported out before House bills. Anonymous voice votes or Unanimous Consent may be granted instead of recorded votes, rendering it impossible to determine which Member proposed an amendment or voted for or against the bill or its separate provisions. In addition, there may be times when a fiscal year ends without the enactment of some appropriations bills. Under those circumstances, Congress usually passes a continuing resolution (CR), which authorizes agencies to go on drawing funds from the treasury and maintain operations.<sup>3</sup> This might be considered a “line of credit” against the enactment of the relevant appropriations for the new fiscal year. Occasionally, Congress does not pass appropriations bills and the CR may be extended throughout the entire fiscal year.

<sup>1</sup> Appropriations for military construction are authorized in the defense authorization act but are enacted through a separate Military Construction, Veterans Affairs, and Related Agencies Appropriations Act. Other defense-related activities are funded through other appropriations bills.

<sup>2</sup> Article I, Section 7, of the Constitution requires that "all Bills for raising Revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives, but the Senate may propose or concur with Amendments as on other Bills."

Methods of Voting

There are several types of votes: voice votes, teller votes, division votes, and unanimous consent votes, but only when there is a recorded vote will there be a vote number and vote tally in the Congressional Record. The section below is based on “Methods of Voting in the House and Senate: Putting Members’ Positions on the Record,” from Congressional Quarterly’s Guide to Congress, 6th ed. (2008), pp. 582-583.

- Division vote—those in favor or opposed stand, and the chair takes a head count: only vote totals are announced and there is no record of how individual Members voted.
- Recorded vote—Members vote electronically, each recorded vote is given a sequential number, and vote totals plus how each Member voted are recorded in the Congressional Record.
- Teller vote—an older method in which Members were counted as they passed between chair-appointed tellers for the “ayes” and “noes”; only vote totals are announced and there is no record of how individual Members voted.
- Unanimous consent vote—usually reserved for non-controversial legislation.
- Voice vote—the presiding officer calls for the “ayes” and then the “noes,” Members shout in chorus on one side or the other, and the chair decides the result.

<sup>3</sup> Article I, Section 9, of the Constitution provides that “No Money shall be drawn from the Treasury, but in Consequence of Appropriations made by Law.”
