

Designation of Ukraine for Temporary Protected Status: Impact and Other Considerations

Updated April 21, 2022

On February 24, 2022, Russia launched a full-scale attack on Ukraine, a country of 43.7 million people. The United States and its allies have condemned the invasion, and are imposing trade and financial sanctions on Russia and enhancing their own military deterrence posture, while also providing aid to Ukraine. More than 4 million people have fled as refugees to neighboring countries, and the United States pledged humanitarian assistance in response to the crisis. The United States maintains deep and multifaceted relations with Ukraine, and the country is a leading recipient of U.S. foreign and military aid.

As of 2019, more than 350,000 foreign-born individuals from Ukraine resided in the United States. Some have U.S. citizenship and others have lawful permanent resident \(LPR\) status. Still others have temporary statuses (such as students, tourists, and temporary workers) and could see their authorized periods of admission end before it is safe to return; and some have no lawful immigration status. Those with temporary or no legal status could benefit from certain temporary immigration relief options.

Temporary Protected Status Designation for Ukraine

On March 3, 2022, the Department of Homeland Security (DHS) announced the designation of Ukraine for Temporary Protected Status \(TPS\) for 18 months. DHS cited the armed conflict and extraordinary conditions in Ukraine resulting from Russia's attack on that country.

The DHS Secretary, after consultation with other U.S. government agencies, may designate a country for TPS if (1) there is an armed conflict preventing the safe return of nationals from that country; (2) there has been an environmental disaster in the country that substantially disrupts living conditions; or (3) there are "extraordinary and temporary conditions" that prevent foreign nationals from safely returning. The DHS Secretary may designate the country for periods of 6 to 18 months and may extend these periods if the country continues to meet the conditions for designation.

To qualify for TPS, an applicant from a designated country must meet certain criteria, including physical presence in the United States since the effective date of the country's TPS designation, continuous residence in the United States since a date specified by the DHS Secretary, and admissibility to the United

Congressional Research Service

<https://crsreports.congress.gov>

IN11889

States (though, as discussed below, some admissibility criteria may be waived). A TPS recipient may remain in the United States for the period in which the TPS designation is in effect and apply for work authorization.

DHS's original announcement of TPS for Ukraine stated that Ukrainian nationals who have continuously resided in the United States since March 1, 2022, and meet the other eligibility requirements may apply for TPS. Subsequently, in a Federal Register notice published on April 19, 2022, DHS rolled the arrival cutoff date to April 11, 2022. Thus, Ukrainians who traveled to the United States between March 1 and April 11 are newly eligible to apply for TPS. DHS estimates that 59,600 Ukrainians are eligible to apply for TPS.

DHS's TPS designation will allow many Ukrainian nationals, including those without lawful immigration status, to remain and work in the United States for at least 18 months. DHS could potentially extend that period if Ukraine continues to meet the conditions for TPS in the future. TPS recipients may also simultaneously hold or pursue another immigration status. The grant of TPS, however, does not confer a direct path to LPR status. Additionally, a TPS recipient who unlawfully entered the United States and later obtained TPS is not considered to be "inspected and admitted" for purposes of establishing eligibility for adjustment of status (e.g., based on a marriage to a U.S. citizen).

Statutory restrictions could bar some Ukrainian nationals from TPS. Although DHS may waive many grounds of inadmissibility that would otherwise make an applicant ineligible for TPS, there are no waivers for those who are inadmissible because of specified criminal offenses (e.g., drug trafficking) or certain security-related grounds (e.g., terrorist activities). Further, an individual is barred from TPS if that person was convicted of any felony or two or more misdemeanors in the United States or if that person falls within the enumerated categories of applicants barred from asylum.

Other Potential Immigration Relief Options

Regardless of whether they are eligible for TPS, Ukrainians may qualify for existing pathways to enter or remain in the United States. Some forms of temporary relief are discussed below.

Special Student Relief

Most international students enter the United States on F-1 visas, which allow for temporary admission to pursue full-time academic study. According to DHS, there are currently 2,616 F-1 students from Ukraine in the United States. Generally, F-1 students must maintain a full course of study and may only work under limited circumstances. In some situations, however, the DHS Secretary may suspend certain regulatory requirements related to full-time study and employment for students from countries experiencing conflict, natural disaster, or other emergent circumstances. This suspension is called special student relief (SSR). On April 19, 2022, DHS added Ukraine to the list of countries for which SSR is available. In addition to SSR, individual F-1 students may apply for permission to work off-campus if they face severe economic hardship due to unforeseen circumstances.

Extensions and Changes of Status

Some Ukrainians who are in the United States in nonimmigrant (i.e., temporary) statuses may wish to extend their stay past the current period of authorized admission. Eligible individuals can apply to DHS for an extension or change of status. DHS has discretion to excuse delayed applications when the delay is due to extraordinary circumstances beyond the applicant's control.

Deferred Action

Commonly referred to as deferred action, DHS may opt not to remove an individual pursuant to its broad enforcement discretion. Although there does not appear to be one central, publicly available agency document that governs the criteria and procedures, DHS may exercise this discretion and decline to remove an inadmissible or deportable Ukrainian national.

Alternatively, DHS has discretion to suspend removal flights to particular countries. The agency reportedly suspended removal flights to Ukraine and other countries in that region.

Author Information

Hillel R. Smith
Legislative Attorney

Kelsey Y. Santamaria
Legislative Attorney

Jill H. Wilson
Analyst in Immigration Policy

Disclaimer

This document was prepared by the Congressional Research Service (CRS). CRS serves as nonpartisan shared staff to congressional committees and Members of Congress. It operates solely at the behest of and under the direction of Congress. Information in a CRS Report should not be relied upon for purposes other than public understanding of information that has been provided by CRS to Members of Congress in connection with CRS's institutional role. CRS Reports, as a work of the United States Government, are not subject to copyright protection in the United States. Any CRS Report may be reproduced and distributed in its entirety without permission from CRS. However, as a CRS Report may include copyrighted images or material from a third party, you may need to obtain the permission of the copyright holder if you wish to copy or otherwise use copyrighted material.